Acknowledgments and Illustration Credits

First and foremost, we would like to thank our husbands, our families, and our friends, who lived through and worked around our writing schedules, and who found themselves woven into a three-year book odyssey. We are grateful for their good spirits, their patience, and their support.

We are grateful to Louis Higgins and to West for giving us this opportunity to join in pioneering a new teaching format in textbooks. The features of the Interactive Casebook Series have allowed us to lace the text with case histories, explanations, and questions—ranging from fundamental to provocative—without making the text jumbled and cluttered. We have found that the format and content enlivens the reading experience and makes students learn more actively. In turn, the process of writing in this format has, for both of us, reshaped our concept of a “casebook” and has sparked new ideas about how to teach more effectively.

Our students played invaluable roles in the development and editing of this book while we taught from the manuscript and used that experience, and their feedback, to make the final product better. In particular, we would like to thank Professor Kunz’s Contracts classes of 2007-08, 2008-09, and 2009-10 and Professor Chomsky’s Contracts classes of 2008 and 2009 for their insights and suggestions. Professor Martha Ertman of the University of Maryland School of Law used parts of the manuscript in a Fall 2009 class, and we thank her and her students for additional feedback.

Our research assistants helped to breathe life into this textbook, finding new cases and case histories, providing student perspectives on the materials, and locating countless “needles in the haystack” of contract law. Professor Kunz would like to thank Abigail Wucherer, Heather Kjos, Lea Tietje, Michael Martin, Yoshitaka Nishikawa, Mara Koeller, Justin Kwong, Matthew Streff, Jacob Kamenir, and Jason DePauw. Professor Chomsky would like to thank Nick Rose and Elizabeth (Libby) Smith.

On the administrative side, our work has been well supported by resources at both schools; our thanks to Dean Eric Janus at William Mitchell College of Law and to Dean David Wippman at the University of Minnesota Law School. As with our Sales book, we again worked with Caldene Bonde in the word processing department at William Mitchell College of Law; we count ourselves very fortunate to have her expertise—and her ability to create blue text boxes and otherwise support our formatting novelties. We also owe a debt of gratitude to our administrative assistants, Meg Daniel and Kristen Gandrow.

Holly Saari, at Red Line Editorial, transformed our typed manuscript into the intricate format of the Interactive Casebook Series with a keen eye for graphics and placement. Heidi Boe and Roxy Birkel, at West, concurrently managed the linking process and generated the table of cases behind the scenes.

For Professor Kunz, this book had its genesis in a conversation over two decades ago with Nick Niemeyer, who was then a publisher's representative assigned to her school. She wishes to thank him for his valuable insights into book publishing and for decades of friendship. We both owe a debt of gratitude to the late Allan Farnsworth, whose remarkable treatise was our constant companion as we wrote and thought. Our thanks as well to Scott Burnham (soon to be at Gonzaga University) for his ideas on how to teach assignability clauses, to Larry Garvin (Ohio State University) for his pair of cases on duress, to Douglas Heidenreich (William Mitchell) for the history of Wood v. Boynton, and to Steve Burton, Charles Knapp, Harry Prince, Nathan Crystal, Amy Kastely, Deborah Post, Sharon Hom, and Nancy Ota, whose casebooks inspired us both in our teaching and in launching ourselves into the adventure of writing a Contracts text.

The photographs accompanying Lucy v. Zehmer (p. 209), Lenawee v. Messerly (p. 387), and Williams v. Walker-Thomas Furniture (pp. 464-65) appear with the generous permission of Professor Franklin Snyder at Texas Wesleyan University School of Law, who is the editor of the ContractsProf Blog at <http://aalscontracts.com>. The photograph of Samuel Williston (p. 75) appears, courtesy of Historical & Special Collections, Harvard Law School Library <http://www.law.harvard.edu/library/special/index.html> (original dimensions 19.5 x 24.3 cm; unknown photographer). The photograph of Judge Richard Posner (p. 687) appears courtesy of Judge Posner's office at the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals. The photograph of Justice Shirley Abrahamson (p. 1027) appears with the permission of the Director of State Courts, Wisconsin Supreme Court. The photograph of the mill in Hadley v. Baxendale (p. 972) is courtesy of Michael Thorpe, Gloucester City Council, which has granted permission for its use in all educational or nonprofit contexts. The remaining images and photographs are in the public domain: Arthur Corbin (p. 75), Lord Mansfield (p. 156), Justice Cardozo's 1936 photo from the Library of Congress collection (p. 241), the Carbolite Smoke Ball poster (p. 269), and the music hall in Royal Surrey Gardens (p. 866). The case opinions appear with the permission of West, a Thomson Reuters business.

As was our habit through two editions of our Sales book, we spent countless hours at coffee shops, talking, editing, and writing (and drinking lots of coffee). We would like to thank our current favorites—Kenwood Café and Heavenly Daze.

Finally, a toast to a friendship that has withstood, even thrived on, our innumerable and lengthy discussions arguing the finer points of contract doctrine, the placement of commas and parentheticals, and the wording of nearly everything!
