ABOUT THE AUTHORS

V. Hale Starr, Ph.D., a pioneer in the field of trial consulting, is founder and Senior Analyst of Starr Litigation Services, Inc. Her knowledge of the American juror has made her one of the most sought-after trial consultants in the nation. Dr. Starr has assisted in more than 3,000 trials in her career and is in great demand as a speaker and faculty member at workshops and seminars sponsored by national bar and faculty associations, law schools, and corporations.

Recognized as America's leading litigation research firm, Starr Litigation Services, Inc., applies social science research techniques in the study of trial strategy, witness credibility, juror persuasion, and juror understanding.

Mark McCormick (LL.B., Georgetown University; LL.M., University of Virginia) is an Iowa attorney who practices primarily in litigation. He served 14 years as a justice of the Supreme Court of Iowa. He previously served as both a district court judge and an assistant county attorney. He lectures frequently, has written several law review articles, has been on the National Judicial College faculty, and is currently chair of the Iowa State Bar Association Jury Instruction Committee.

About the Contributors to This Supplement

David A. Bright (M. Psychol. (Forensics), MAPS), has a master's degree in forensic psychology from the University of New South Wales (UNSW). He commenced a Ph.D. at the UNSW in 2000, investigating the influence of gruesome evidence on juror decision making. David has worked as a psychologist/forensic psychologist in a variety of settings, including mental health, police, corrections, and private practice. He is a member of the American Psychology and Law Society and is the NSW President of the Australian and New Zealand Association of Psychiatry, Psychology and Law.

Rob Conklin is Director of Research for Starr Litigation Services. His duties include design, development, facilitation, and results preparation for Starr research studies, as well as research and writing for pertinent topics in litigation and communication. He has a bachelor's degree in English from Boston University, where he was a Trustee Scholar. His contributions include the research and writing behind Starr Litigation Service's review of generational differences in jurors. Mr. Conklin is a graduate of Boston University, where he was admitted as a Trustee's Scholar and participated in the Varied Lecture Series for that program. Before joining STARR, Mr. Conklin's research experience included work at the Human Gene Therapy Research Institute, performing viral gene therapy research and development for potential cancer treatments. Mr. Conklin currently conducts research design, data analysis, in-court consultation, and jury selection. He has written extensively on the topics of applying notions of heroic motive to large companies; employment law as seen through the eyes of juries; generational differences among jurors; and the emergence of Generation Y in the jury room.

Lara Dolnik has a first class honors degree in psychology as well as a law degree from the Australian National University. She has taught psychology and law—including research, design and statistics, social psychology, and developmental psychology at Sydney University and the University of New South Wales. She lectures in both Australia and the United States. Lara has published in the areas of trial strategy, social psychology, group processes, the psychology of the courtroom, and is an editor for the International Journal of Forensic Psychology.

David Rifkind received his J.D. from Columbia Law School, where he was a Harlan Fisk Stone Scholar and business editor of the Columbia Business Law Review. He clerked for the Honorable Mitchell H. Cohen in the Federal District Court for New Jersey, Camden Vicinage. Mr. Rifkind has an extensive background in litigation and negotiation, both as an associate at two major law firms—Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom and Morgan, Lewis and Bockius—and as an in-house attorney at two major corporations—General Electric and Exide Corporation.

Ryan Scully attended Villanova Law School and Fairfield University. He worked for General Electric Company's Corporate Environmental Programs from 2001 to 2004, where he was responsible for developing several technologically based programs for GE CEP, such as electronic litigation management and tracking tools. Melissa R. Hill-Anderson is a Research Analyst for Starr Litigation Services. She received her B.A. in political science from Iowa State University, where her studies focused on foreign policy and international theory. She is a member of the Alpha Sigma Pi political science honor society. Ms. Hill-Anderson has extensive experience in survey design, data analysis, and report construction in legal and market research. Her duties at Starr include theme development analysis, questionnaire design, and data analysis.

Acknowledgments

Writing a book such as this is not possible without assistance. Much of the new information discussed in the third edition of Jury Selection and its supplements has been designed, tested, and revised by Starr Litigation Services, Inc., research assistants and analysts. Special thanks go to Heather Mertz, and Danielle Mitchell, who supplied research and content for many areas of this update.
