The Authors

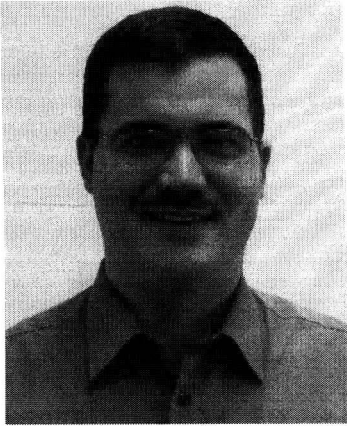

Prof. Dr iur. Andrea Büchler joined the University of Zurich as Professor of Law in 2002. She holds the chair of private and comparative law. Her areas of research are: family law, law of persons, comparative law, Islamic and Middle Eastern law, medicine and law, and legal gender studies. She founded the Centre for Islamic and Middle Eastern Legal Studies at the Faculty of Law of the University of Zurich in 2008. She is the co-director of the scientific board of the University Priority Research Programme 'Asia and Europe'. In 2003, she co-founded the Centre for Family Sciences, a Switzerland-wide association that initiates, conducts, and supports high-quality research in the field of the family. She has been the co-leader of the training as a specialist solicitor in family law since 2007. She was awarded a fellowship at the Institute of Advanced Studies, Berlin, for the academic year 2008/2009.

Andrea Büchler earned her MA, Ph.D., and venia docendi in Private Law, Comparative Law, and Gender Law between 1990 and 2002 at the University of Basle, Switzerland. Her recent activities include leadership of the interdisciplinary and inter-institutional research project 'Children and Divorce – Current Legal Practices and Their Impact on Family Transitions' and the project 'Legal Gender Studies – a Commented List of Sources', both financed by the Swiss National Science Foundation (SNF), as well as research focused on legal pluralism in Europe and the publication of an extensive comment on the Swiss federal law on registered partnerships and on medical law. She is a member of a number of legal research networks and institutions both within and outside universities.

The Authors

Prof. Dr iur. Thomas Gächter holds the chair of constitutional law, administrative law, and social security law at the Faculty of Law of the University of Zurich (since 2006). He is at the same time visiting professor for social security law and health law at the University of Lucerne. After university education at the universities of Zurich and Louvain (Belgium), he graduated in Zurich and worked as a scientific assistant at the Chair of Prof. Dr Alfred Koelz (University of Zurich). In his practical work he was clerk of the justice at the Court of Administrative Law in Zurich. In 2002 he obtained a doctoral degree at the University of Zurich and was in the same year appointed as a lecturer (Privatdozent) at the same university. From 2004 to 2006 he was associate professor at the University of Lucerne (social security law) and Research Professor of the Swiss National Fund with a project on the fundamentals of Swiss social security law at the University of Zurich. He teaches constitutional law, administrative law, social security law, and health law. He is author of a standard textbook in health law, as well as other publications in this field. He works on different projects in health law, social security law, and administrative law.
