

The MORAL of the STORY

THIRD EDITION

An Introduction to Ethics

THE MCGRAW - HILL COMPANIES
FOR DONATION ONLY
NOT FOR RESALE

HIGHER EDUCATION
2002

THE MCGRAW - HILL COMPANIES
FOR DONATION ONLY
NOT FOR RESALE

NINA

ND

The Moral of the Story

AN INTRODUCTION TO ETHICS

Third Edition

NINA ROSENSTAND

San Diego Mesa College

Boston Burr Ridge, IL Dubuque, IA Madison, WI New York
San Francisco St. Louis Bangkok Bogotá Caracas Kuala Lumpur
Lisbon London Madrid Mexico City Milan Montreal New Delhi
Santiago Seoul Singapore Sydney Taipei Toronto

McGraw-Hill Higher Education

A Division of The McGraw-Hill Companies

THE MORAL OF THE STORY

Published by McGraw-Hill, a business unit of The McGraw-Hill Companies, Inc., 1221 Avenue of the Americas, New York, NY, 10020. Copyright © 2000, 1997, 1994 by The McGraw-Hill Companies, Inc. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced or distributed in any form or by any means, or stored in a database or retrieval system, without the prior written consent of The McGraw-Hill Companies, Inc., including, but not limited to, in any network or other electronic storage or transmission, or broadcast for distance learning. Some ancillaries, including electronic and print components, may not be available to customers outside the United States.

This book is printed on acid-free paper.

5 6 7 8 9 0 BAH/BAH 0 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1

ISBN 0-7674-0595-1

Sponsoring editor, Kenneth King; production editor, Carla Kirschenbaum; manuscript editor, Elaine Kehoe; text and cover designer, Donna Davis; design manager and art editor, Susan Breitbard; photo researcher, Brian Pecko; illustrator, Judith Ogus; manufacturing manager, Randy Hurst. Cover art © Karen Barbour. The text was set in 10.5/12.5 Berkeley Book by ColorType, San Diego, and printed on 45# Chromatone Matte by Banta Book Group, Harrisonburg.

Text, photo, and illustration credits appear at the back of the book on page 554, which constitutes an extension of the copyright page.

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Rosenstand, Nina.

The moral of the story / Nina Rosenstand. — 3rd ed.

p. cm.

Includes bibliographical references and index.

ISBN 0-7674-0595-1 (alk. paper)

1. Ethics I. Title.

BJ1012.R59 1999

171—dc21

99-17115

CIP

Preface

The Moral of the Story is an introduction to ethical theory written primarily for such college courses as Introduction to Ethics, Moral Problems, and Introduction to Philosophy: Values. Although many textbooks in value theory or ethics present problems of social importance for students to discuss, such as abortion, euthanasia, and capital punishment, in my experience it is better for students to be introduced to basic ethical theory before they are plunged into discussions involving moral judgments. As a result, this book provides an overview of influential classical and modern approaches to ethical theory. However, without practical application of the theories, there can be no complete understanding of the problems raised, so each chapter includes examples that illustrate and explore the issues. As in the first two editions, I have chosen to use examples primarily from the world of fiction.

There is a growing interest in narrative theory among American, as well as European, philosophers; ethicists and other thinkers are beginning to include stories in their courses, as well as in their professional papers, not only as examples of problem solving but also as illustrations of an epistemological phenomenon. Humans are, in Alasdair MacIntyre's words, storytelling animals, and humans seem to choose the narrative form as their favorite way to structure meaning as they attempt to make sense of their reality. Recognizing this trend and taking advantage of most students' natural interest in films and stories in general, I have selected a number of fictional narrative illustrations of moral problems to conclude each chapter rather than relying solely on real-life case stories. These stories, referred to as Narratives, are in the form of summaries or short excerpts.

Organization

Like the second edition, the third edition of The Moral of the Story is divided into three major sections. Part 1 introduces the topic of ethics and places the phenomenon of storytelling within the context of cross-cultural moral education and discussion. Part 2 examines the conduct theories of ethical relativism, psychological and ethical egoism, utilitarianism, and Kantian deontology and explores the concepts of personhood, rights, and justice. Part 3 focuses on the subject of virtue theory and contains chapters on Socrates and Plato, Aristotle, contemporary virtue theories in American and Continental philosophy, and gender theory. In addition, the virtues of compassion and gratitude are examined in detail.

Major Changes to the Third Edition

Each chapter now ends with a set of study questions that immediately precede the primary readings. These questions are based on the text itself. If the instructor should wish to conduct class discussions and/or tests independently of any use of the primary readings and the narratives (which include their own sets of study questions), this feature should make it easier for the instructor and her or his students to incorporate the discussions of the chapter into essays, group discussions, or class discussions.

Key discussions have been updated in several chapters, such as the introduction in Chapter 1. The discussion about the relationship between stories and violence in Chapter 2 includes a discussion of the possible harm caused by violent films. Chapter 3 now contains a discussion of the problematic concept “culture.” Chapter 5 includes an expanded discussion of utilitarian principles applied to some official policies, as well as a selection from Mill’s Autobiography. Chapter 7 contains several expansions of the discussions about rights, including a longer section dealing with the death penalty. Chapter 10 has been updated with a discussion of the political aspects of the debate over conduct vs. character. Chapter 11 has a new section, “Feminism in America: An Overview,” and an expanded section, “Facets of Feminism Today,” that includes classical, difference, radical, and equity feminism. Chapter 12 (formerly Chapter 13) has been expanded with an updated section on Philip Hallie and a background section about the Chinese philosophical tradition incorporated from the previous Chapter 12. Chapter 13 (formerly Chapter 14) has been restructured to include a section on writing one’s own life story as a moral project and draws a parallel to political events at the end of the millennium.

Many new boxes have been added throughout the book, highlighting such issues as modern cynicism and psychological egoism and the harm principle applied to drug legislation. Other new boxes put Kant’s attitude toward non-European populations into perspective, discuss the contemporary reluctance to include certain members of our society in the “persons” category, consider Megan’s Law as an example of rights traded for benefits, discuss euthanasia as a right, and expand the discussion of Nietzsche’s moral philosophy.

The new primary readings include excerpts from Hobbes’s Leviathan, Kant’s Grounding for the Metaphysics of Morals, Stephen Nathanson’s An Eye for an Eye, John Douglas’s Journey Into Darkness, Plato’s Euthyphro, Aristotle’s Nicomachean Ethics, Simone de Beauvoir’s The Second Sex, Philip Hallie’s Tales of Good and Evil, Help and Harm, Martha Nussbaum’s Love’s Knowledge, and Tristine Rainer’s Your Life as Story.

The new narratives are mostly films, with three exceptions: excerpts from Euripides’ Medea and Goethe’s Sorrows of Young Werther and a reinstatement and expansion of Sheri Tepper’s Sideshow, by request from readers of the first edition who missed the story in the second edition. The films include Wag the Dog, Extreme Measures, Saving Private Ryan, High Noon — reinstated from the first edition by request and placed in a group with two other thematically related films, Outland and Cop Land — Gattaca, Dead Man Walking, Losing Isaiah, As Good As It Gets, Smoke Signals, and Tombstone. I hope the added movie stills will provide additional inspiration for the readers of this edition.

Using the Narratives

The narratives have been chosen from a wide variety of sources ranging from epic prose, poems, and novels to films. I wish to emphasize that from a literary and artistic point of view that summaries and excerpts do not do the originals justice; a story worth experiencing, be it a novel, short story, or film, can't be reduced to a mere plot outline or fragment and still retain all of its essence. As Martha Nussbaum says, the form is an inherent part of the story content. Usually, there is more to the story than the bare bones of a moral problem, and in writing these summaries I have had to disregard much of the richness of story and character development. Nevertheless, I have chosen the summary or excerpt format in order to discuss a number of different stories and genres as they relate to specific issues in ethics. Because I believe it is important to show that there is a cross-cultural, historic tradition of exploring moral problems through telling a story, I have opted for a broad selection of narratives. There are, of course, other ways in which stories and ethical theory can be brought together; one might, for instance, select one or two short stories or films in their original format for class discussion. I hope that instructors will indeed select a few stories—novels, short stories, or videos—for their classes to experience firsthand. However, the narratives are written so that firsthand experience should not be necessary to a discussion of the problem presented by the story. The summaries and excerpts give readers just enough information to enable them to discuss the moral problem presented. I hope that some readers will become inspired to seek out the originals on their own.

Because space is limited, I have not been able to include more than a sampling of stories, and I readily admit that my choices are subjective ones; I personally find them interesting as illustrations and effective in a classroom context where students come from many different cultural backgrounds. Because I am a native of Denmark, I have chosen to include a few references to the Scandinavian literary tradition. I am fully aware that others might choose other stories or even choose completely different ethical problems to illustrate, and I am grateful to the many users of the first and second editions, instructors as well as students, who have let me know about their favorite stories and how they thought this selection of stories might be expanded and improved. The new narratives reflect some of these suggestions.

Acknowledgments

The previous edition introduced a number of major changes in the structure and content of the text. I remain grateful to the following colleagues and friends for their invaluable detailed assistance with the second edition: Carol Enns, College of the Sequoias; John Hasenjaeger, Clacamas Community College; John Osborne, Butte College; Tony Pettina, San Diego Mesa College; Sue Savage-Rumbaugh, Georgia State University; Søren Peter Hansen, Metropolitanskolen, Copenhagen, Denmark; Peter Kemp, Center for Ethics and Law, Copenhagen; Peter Atterton, San Diego State University; Thomas Wren, Loyola University; and Brian Shea, Loyola University.

The present edition has fewer major changes but many smaller additions, boxes, and expanded discussions. For their assistance in helping me prepare these changes for the third edition, I would like to extend my gratitude to a great many people. First of all, I want to thank my editor at Mayfield, Ken King, for his vision and his drive—and I really appreciate the fact that he enjoys a good movie, too! My production editor, Carla Kirschenbaum, deserves much appreciation for great e-mail communications, for having the patience of a saint, and for keeping a clear perspective throughout the editing process. I thank my manuscript editor, Elaine Kehoe, for her skillful editing. In addition, I would like to express my gratitude to Chris Poulos, Susan Shook, Marty Granahan, Susan Breitbard, and Brian Pecko. Warm thoughts go to my former editor, and friend, Jim Bull, without whom this book wouldn't have existed.

Next I want to thank my students at San Diego Mesa College, in particular my classes in Introduction to Philosophy: Values, Problems in Social and Political Philosophy, and Philosophy of Women in World Cultures. Their enthusiasm, sound skepticism, and fresh insights—and their enthusiasm in suggesting new films for the third edition—have been an invaluable source and encouragement for me.

In addition, I would like to express my gratitude specifically to the following colleagues and friends for their help and suggestions: Helmut Wautischer, Sonoma State University; Charles Zappia, San Diego Mesa College; Michael Kuttner, San Diego Mesa College; Jonathan McLeod, San Diego Mesa College; Arlene Wolinski, San Diego Mesa College; Mary Lou Locke, San Diego Mesa College; Richard Hammes, San Diego Mesa College; John D. Miller, University of Central Oklahoma; Emily Dial-Driver, Rogers University; Eugene Troxell, San Diego State University; Lawrence Hinman, University of San Diego; Eva Frederiksen, Helsingør, Denmark; Betty B. Owens, Dallas; Philip Martin, Long Beach; Nancy and Herbert Covner, Phoenix (for all the clippings); David Galloway, San Diego; Ed Wilbur, San Diego; Steen Wackerhausen, Århus University, Denmark; Karsten Friis Johansen, University of Copenhagen, Denmark; and Betsy Decyk, California State University, Long Beach. Many thanks to those who reviewed the manuscript for the third edition: Art Jackson, Providence College; Richard J. Mayock, West Los Angeles College; Pam R. Sailors, Southwest Missouri State University; and Joe S. Wixom, Utah Valley State College. A special thanks goes to American Indian activist and author Russell Means for enlightening me about the name preferred by indigenous Americans: American Indians, not “Native Americans.”

I am grateful also to Peter Atterton, SDSU, for sharing his insight on the issue of race and the Enlightenment with me personally and in a more formal setting with my colleagues and students at Mesa College. I thank Janine Idziac and the Department of Philosophy, Loras College, Dubuque, Iowa, for inviting me to be the keynote speaker at The Matchette Lecture on the subject of literature, film, and ethics and for giving me a number of valuable suggestions for the third edition. A deeply felt appreciation goes to my friend and colleague Peter Kemp, University of Copenhagen, Denmark, for inviting me to give the keynote address at the conference in Filosofisk Forum, Hillerød, Denmark, on Identity and Authenticity. This gave me a rare opportunity to discuss connections between ethics and fiction with a Danish audience. The conference was held in memory of Dr. Kemp's wife (and my good friend) Margrete Lomholt, who was taken away from her family and friends so prematurely.

Additionally, I have a special appreciation to convey. The first and second editions of this book included a short section about Philip Hallie and his studies of the Le Chambon phenomenon, based partly on his writings and partly on my own recollections of his paper read in San Diego as well as our subsequent conversation. I had always hoped to be able to continue that conversation on some future occasion; however, Professor Hallie passed away in 1994. Then, in May 1997, to my surprise, I received a very warm letter from Philip Hallie's widow, Doris Hallie, telling me of her appreciation that her husband's work was mentioned in my textbook and pointing out an error in my text (which has now been corrected!). In addition, she sent me a copy of the newly published work by Hallie, Tales of Good and Evil, Help and Harm, which is based on a manuscript he left behind.

As they were for the two previous editions, my parents, Gladys and Finn Rosenstand of Denmark, have been there for me, albeit with an ocean and a continent between us most of the time. They have been as active as ever, chasing down obscure bits of information for me and acting as my own private overseas clipping service. Thank you for all the support, Mor and Far, and for all the stories. And thank you, Rowdie, for your loving reminders of a world away from the computer. Most of all, I want to thank my husband, Craig R. Covner, for his love and support; Craig, you are my rock of refuge and sanity—and you make me laugh, too.

Contents

Preface vii

PART 1

The Story as a Tool of Ethics 1

Chapter 1

Who Cares About Ethics? 3

Thoughts at the Turn of the Millennium 3

Ethics, Morals, and Values 4

Applied Ethics in Today's Society: A
Sampler 9

Why Do We Have Rules of Moral Conduct? 21

Ethics in Narratives 23

NARRATIVE: Jurassic Park 24

NARRATIVE: Wag the Dog 26

Chapter 2

Stories with Morals 31

Learning Moral Lessons from Stories 31

Telling Stories 36

Stories as Role Models 44

Primary Readings and Narratives 68

PRIMARY READING: Plato, The Republic 68

PRIMARY READING: Aristotle, Poetics 71

NARRATIVE: Medea 73

NARRATIVE: *The Sorrows of Young
Werther* 77

NARRATIVE: Pulp Fiction 78

NARRATIVE: Lord Jim 81

PART 2

What Should I Do? Theories of Conduct 85

Chapter 3

Ethical Relativism 87

How to Deal with Moral Differences 87

The Lessons of Anthropology 90

Is Tolerance All We Need? 95

Refuting Ethical Relativism 101

Primary Readings and Narratives 111

PRIMARY READING: Ruth Benedict,
"Anthropology and the Abnormal" 111

PRIMARY READING: Bhikhu Parekh,
"The Concept of Multicultural Education" 114

NARRATIVE: Possessing the Secret of Joy 117

NARRATIVE: Sideshow 120

NARRATIVE: Do the Right Thing 123

Chapter 4Myself or Others? 127

Psychological Egoism 127

Ethical Egoism 140

Altruism: Ideal and Reciprocal 147

Primary Readings and Narratives 152

PRIMARY READING: Plato, The Republic 152PRIMARY READING: Thomas Hobbes, Leviathan 155PRIMARY READING: Ayn Rand, "The Ethics of Emergencies" 157NARRATIVE: Hero 160NARRATIVE: Madame Bovary 163NARRATIVE: Atlas Shrugged 165Chapter 5*Using Your Reason, Part 1:*Utilitarianism 169Jeremy Bentham and the Hedonistic
Calculus 170John Stuart Mill: Higher and Lower Pleasures 179

Act and Rule Utilitarianism 190

Primary Readings and Narratives 193

PRIMARY READING: Jeremy Bentham, "Of the Principle of Utility" 193PRIMARY READING: John Stuart Mill, Utilitarianism 195NARRATIVE: "The Blacksmith and the Baker" 198NARRATIVE: The Brothers Karamazov 200NARRATIVE: "The Ones Who Walk Away from Omelas" 202NARRATIVE: Saving Private Ryan 203NARRATIVE: Extreme Measures 206Chapter 6*Using Your Reason, Part 2:*Kant's Deontology 211

To Do the Right Thing 211

Rational Beings Are Ends in Themselves 222

Primary Readings and Narratives 232

PRIMARY READING: Immanuel Kant, *Grounding
for the Metaphysics of Morals* 233PRIMARY READING: Immanuel Kant, Metaphysics of Morals 234

Three Deontological Films 237

NARRATIVE: High Noon 237NARRATIVE: Outland 239NARRATIVE: Cop Land 240NARRATIVE: Abandon Ship! 241NARRATIVE: Rebel Without a Cause 242NARRATIVE: Star Trek: The Next Generation,
"Justice" 243NARRATIVE: The Bridges of Madison County 246Chapter 7*Personhood, Rights, and Justice 249

Personhood 249

Persons and Rights 251

The Question of Rights 257

Primary Readings and Narratives 283

PRIMARY READING: The United Nations
Universal Declaration of Human Rights 284PRIMARY READING: John Rawls, "Justice as Fairness" 288PRIMARY READING: Stephen Nathanson,
An Eye for an Eye? The Morality of Punishing by Death 290

PRIMARY READING: John Douglas and Mark
Olshaker, Journey Into Darkness 292
NARRATIVE: Blade Runner 295
NARRATIVE: Gattaca 296

NARRATIVE: Losing Isaiah 299
NARRATIVE: "The Jigsaw Man" 300
NARRATIVE: Dead Man Walking 302

PART 3

How Should I Be? Theories of Virtue 305

Chapter 8

Socrates, Plato, and the Good Life 307

What Is Virtue? 307

What Is Character? 307

The Case for Virtue Ethics 308

The Question of How to Live 310

The Forms and the Good 320

Primary Readings and Narratives 327

PRIMARY READING: Plato, Euthyphro 327

PRIMARY READING: Plato, The Apology 330

NARRATIVE: A Man for All Seasons 334

NARRATIVE: "The Myth of the Cave" 337

Chapter 9

Aristotle's Virtue Theory 341

Aristotle the Scientist 341

Aristotle and the Virtues 347

Primary Readings and Narratives 360

PRIMARY READINGS: Aristotle, *Nicomachean
Ethics* 360, 363

NARRATIVE: "The Flight of Icarus" 365

NARRATIVE: Njal's Saga 367

NARRATIVE: Lord Jim 369

NARRATIVE: "A Piece of Advice" 370

NARRATIVE: As Good As It Gets 372

Chapter 10

Modern Perspectives 375

A Revival of Virtue Theory 375

Have Virtue, and Then Go Ahead 379

The Quest for Authenticity 387

Primary Readings and Narratives 409

PRIMARY READING: Søren Kierkegaard,
"Johannes Climacus" 409

PRIMARY READING: Søren Kierkegaard,
"Either/Or" 410

PRIMARY READING: Emmanuel Levinas, "The Paradox of Morality" 411

NARRATIVE: Hannah and Her Sisters 413

NARRATIVE: No Exit 415

NARRATIVE: A Few Good Men 416

Chapter 11

Different Gender, Different Ethic? 421

Feminism and Virtue Theory 421

What Is Gender Equality? 422

Facets of Feminism Today 435

Primary Readings and Narratives 449

PRIMARY READING: Simone de Beauvoir, The Second Sex 449

PRIMARY READING: Carol Gilligan, In a Different Voice 452

- NARRATIVE: A Doll's House 454
 NARRATIVE: Like Water for Chocolate 459
 NARRATIVE: Thelma and Louise 462

Chapter 12

Case Studies in Virtues 465

Compassion: Are We Born with It? 465

Gratitude: How Much and When? 473

Virtues and Conduct: Ethical Pluralism? 490

Primary Readings and Narratives 493

PRIMARY READING: Philip Hallie, Tales of Good and Evil, Help and Harm 494

PRIMARY READING: Lin Yutang, "On Growing Old Gracefully" 495

NARRATIVE: The Parable of the Good
 Samaritan 497

NARRATIVE: "King Yudisthira and the Dog" 499

NARRATIVE: Schindler's List 501

NARRATIVE: Eat Drink Man Woman 503

NARRATIVE: Grand Canyon 506

NARRATIVE: Othello 509

NARRATIVE: "The Faithful Wife and the Woman Warrior" 510

NARRATIVE: The Count of Monte Cristo 512

NARRATIVE: The Searchers 513

Chapter 13

The Moral Importance of Stories, or The More I Love the Story 515

Stories as Survival Mechanisms 515

Seeing Life as a Story 522

Primary Readings and Narratives 530

PRIMARY READING: Martha Nussbaum,
Love's Knowledge 530

PRIMARY READING: Tristine Rainer, Your Life as Story 532

NARRATIVE: Haroun and the Sea of Stories 434

NARRATIVE: Smoke Signals 537

NARRATIVE: Tombstone 539

Glossary 543

Selected Bibliography 549

Credits 554

Index 555

Part 1

*The Story
as a Tool of Ethics*

Chapter One

Who Cares About Ethics?

Thoughts at the Turn of the Millennium

*A*n ancient Chinese curse says, “May you live in interesting times.” For many of us, the 1990s have been extraordinarily “interesting,” especially considering that these have been years of relative prosperity and peace in this country. The president of the United States is impeached for lying under oath about an extramarital affair. A former priest in Dallas confesses to having abused altar boys sexually. A young divorced mother straps her two young sons in the family car and rolls the car into a lake, drowning the children. A serial killer preys on women in Spokane and dumps their bodies in the outskirts of town. A young man rapes and kills a little girl in the restroom in a Las Vegas casino, while his friend waits outside without interfering. Three white males torture and drag a black male to his death behind a car in Jasper, Texas. And in many communities, children have taken firearms to their schools and killed fellow students and teachers—possibly one of the most heartbreaking and bewildering scenarios for people to face and try to come to terms with.

In addition, terrorism has struck home with the bombing of the Murrah Building in Oklahoma City and the World Trade Center in New York City. We feel more vulnerable to the possibility of terrorist attacks by chemical or biological weapons, even though a 1998 suspicion of a terrorist plan to spread anthrax turned out to be a false alarm.

In short, we feel more vulnerable. We lock our doors at night, we “Club®” our cars while popping into a store, we sign prenuptial agreements, we take out a number of case-specific insurances. We don’t trust each other much anymore. A new concept has been added to our everyday vocabulary: “road rage.” However, statistics tell us that violent crime, including murder and school violence, is down in all major cities. Is it just a perception that life is getting cheaper, that some of us have become less sensitized to the plight of others?

It does indeed appear as if some people’s consciences speak with weaker voices today than in the past, if they speak at all, and some crimes of today seem more cruel and demeaning to their victims than were crimes of the past. Civilization is a veneer that in an increasing number of cases seems to be wearing thin. But if that is really the case and not merely a perception, then there is an increasing need to discuss these matters. We can’t expect to arrive at some unified conclusion about what we should do, but we can keep the subject alive: How do we improve on the quality of social life when so many of us seem to be more interested in doing for ourselves? What social and personal values do we want to bring with us as a society of individuals moving into the third millennium? What kind of children do we want to raise to be future citizens of the twenty-first century? How do we make sure that common courtesy and moral standards are part of the world view of the future? Do we even agree on what counts as common courtesy and moral standards?

These are questions not only for professional educators and parents but also for every one of us who interacts with other people, because even though it may sometimes feel good to shortchange, ignore, or bully someone, we realize that it feels awful to be shortchanged, ignored, or bullied. It is only a short step to the realization that if we don't want to be treated that way, then we shouldn't treat others that way, either; but that short step may well be the step that defines civilization. It is commonly known as the Golden Rule, and we encounter it in several versions in this book.

Ethics, Morals, and Values

One might ask, What exactly do we mean by saying that “things are getting worse,” morally speaking? Do we mean that, overall, everyone has less moral sense now than, say, thirty years ago? Or do we mean that some people (but not everyone) are becoming much worse than even the most morally corrupt individuals of the previous generation? Do we mean that morality itself has changed—that it no longer encompasses a set of more or less well-defined Christian values but rather an ill-defined set of secular values? Or do we mean that its emphasis has shifted from altruism to egoism? Some people might say that we are on a downhill slide when we abandon certain older values (such as “Humans are more important than other creatures” and “The land has been given to humans to develop”) for newer values (such as “All creatures deserve respect” and “The land must be protected from abuse”). Others may view this change in attitude as an example of moral progress.

In addition, the depressing vision of “things getting worse” should be seen in the proper perspective. Consider that (1) we are witnessing a universal phenomenon; every generation seems to believe that the present, somehow, cannot compare with the past in terms of moral values; (2) we are much more exposed to human suffering all over the world than any generation of the past has ever been, because the news reaches us instantly through television, radio, newspapers, and the Internet, and the news that bombards us is most often the bad news of human woes—wars, crimes, and other bloodshed or natural disasters; and (3) such massive exposure will often lead to a certain cynical attitude toward our fellow human beings, a tendency to believe the worst-case scenarios. (Whether this attitude is fair is discussed in Chapter 4.)

It's important to keep this misanthropic view of modern morality in perspective. Today, our general awareness of what kind of conduct breaks the moral rules has actually become increasingly enlightened. In times past, an abused woman patient might not report her psychoanalyst for any wrongdoing, for a number of reasons; today, we are aware of how doctors ought to behave with their patients, and we speak up if they don't live up to our expectations. We believe that teachers should generally avoid having affairs with their students and employers with their employees and so on. We expect people in official positions not to abuse their power and people in

THE DUPLEX by GLENN McCOY

The Duplex © Glenn McCoy. Reprinted with permission of Universal Press Syndicate. All rights reserved.

Are times getting worse? Are people getting less sensitive to one another and more rude? Or are people generally becoming more aware of rudeness and callousness? Can you relate to either character in this cartoon?

leadership positions not to intimidate their employees through sexual harassment. In previous eras corruption and abuse of political power were, as we read in our history books, rampant. At least, so the argument goes, we are now more watchful. And although some books and films seem to say that life is cheap and brutality is fun, the majority of movies and novels today have a distinct moral point, which is not lost on the audience. (We will take up the moral impact of movies and books later in this chapter.)

There is also the phenomenon of introductory ethics classes in schools. Courses such as Introduction to Values, Ethics, and Contemporary Moral Problems are offered by all colleges, with more classes being added all the time. Although some students do take these courses because they are genuinely interested in the issues raised, most students take them because they are required to do so. Why, though, are such classes required? Is it because university professors believe that students have such appalling morals that they need to take a class before they can be let loose on society as lawyers, engineers, doctors, schoolteachers, and so on? That can hardly be the case, because these classes usually don't teach morals—they teach ethics. It also is not because students are seen to lack moral sense, but because they are assumed to have a moral sense that should be trained to work properly: not just to follow the rules or decide to break them, but to question them and come up with a reasonable answer as to why they are good enough or not good enough.

So what is the difference between ethics and morality? “Ethics” comes from Greek (ethos, character), and “morality” from Latin (mores, character, custom, or habit). Today, in English as well as in many other Western languages, both words refer to some form of proper conduct. Although we, in our everyday lives, don't distinguish clearly between morals and ethics, there is a subtle difference: Some people think the word morality has negative connotations, and in fact it does carry two different sets of associations for most of us. The positive ones are guidance, goodness, humanitarian