

THE GULF CRISIS AND ITS GLOBAL AFTERMATH

Edited by
GAD BARZILAI,
AHARON KLIEMAN
and GIL SHIDLO

ROUTLEDGE
R

The Gulf crisis and its global aftermath

Edited by Gad Barzilai,
Aharon Klieman and Gil Shidlo

London and New York

First published 1993
by Routledge
11 New Fetter Lane, London EC4P 4EE
Simultaneously published in the USA and Canada
by Routledge
29 West 35th Street, New York, NY 10001

© 1993 Gad Barzilai, Aharon Klieman and Gil Shidlo

Typeset in 10/12pt Times by Witwell Ltd, Southport Printed and bound in Great Britain by T.J. Press (Padstow) Ltd, Padstow, Cornwall.

All rights reserved. No part of this book may be reprinted or reproduced or utilized in any form or by any electronic, mechanical, or other means, now known or hereafter invented, including photocopying and recording, or in any information storage or retrieval system, without permission in writing from the publishers.

British Library Cataloguing in Publication Data

A catalogue reference for this book is available from the British Library

ISBN 0-415-08002-9

Library of Congress Cataloging in Publication Data

The Gulf crisis and its global aftermath / edited by Gad Barzilai, Aharon Klieman and Gil Shidlo.

p. cm.

Includes bibliographical references and index.

ISBN 0-415-08002-9

1. Middle East—Politics and government—1979– 2. World politics—1989– 3. Persian Gulf War, 1991—Miscellanea.

I. Barzilai, Gad. II. Klieman, Aaron S. III. Shidlo, Gil, 1956– .

DS63.I.G85 1993

956.05—dc20

92-42816
CIP

The Gulf crisis and its global aftermath

The crisis in the Gulf of 1990-91 has affected more than just the regional powers in the area. Rippling outward, its military, economic and political effects are still being felt throughout the international political system, testing American steadfastness in the face of Saddam Hussein's political survival, the EC's ability to form a united front on foreign policy issues and the effectiveness of the United Nations in confronting international aggression.

The rationale behind this book is to investigate and analyse the various aspects of the crisis, especially in regard to the interactions between internal and international politics and repercussions on the prospects for a new order in the Middle East. It also examines the wider effects of the war outside the immediate theatre of action, and includes analysis of Europe, America and the Soviet Union.

Each one of the essays chosen for this volume has been written by an expert in his or her field. This collaboration between historians, regional specialists and political scientists, integrating a variety of research methods in the framework of one book, will be useful to a wide circle of readers, including graduates and undergraduates, political scientists and area specialists.

Gad Barzilai is Assistant Professor in the Department of Political Science, Tel-Aviv University, Aharon Klieman is Professor of International Relations in the Department of Political Science, Tel-Aviv University and Gil Shidlo is Assistant Professor in the Department of Political Science, Tel-Aviv University.

Contributors

Dr Gad Barzilai is an Assistant Professor in the Political Science Department at Tel-Aviv University. He has written three books and many articles about the social-political sources and repercussions of armed conflicts, interstate and intercommunal encounters, and national security crises, especially in the Middle East.

Professor Abraham Ben-Zvi is an Associate Professor in the Department of Political Science and a Senior Researcher in the Jaffee Centre for Strategic Studies at Tel-Aviv University. He received his PhD degree from the University of Chicago and has published extensively on Middle East issues such as American diplomacy in the Middle East and the cognitive dimension in political behaviour. His most recent books are: Between Lausanne and Geneva: International Conferences and the Arab-Israeli Conflict (Westview Press 1989), and The United States and Israel, 1953-1991: The Limits of the 'Special Relationship' (Columbia University Press 1993).

Professor Gideon Doron is an Associate Professor and the Chairman of the Department of Political Science at Tel-Aviv University. He has published numerous studies including five books, primarily on game theory and public policy in Western democracies and in the Middle East.

Dr Gil Feiler is a lecturer at Tel-Aviv University and the Hebrew University, and a Research Fellow at the Bar-Ilan Centre for Strategic Studies. He has published articles on labour mobilization in the Middle East and on economic cooperation and development in the Middle East. Currently he is completing a book on the Arab boycott of Israel.

Dr Jacob Goldberg is a former Senior Research Fellow at the Moshe Dayan Centre and Chairman of the Editorial Board of the Moshe Dayan Centre Occasional Papers Series. His fields of specialization are: the modern and contemporary history of the Arab world with particular reference to Saudi Arabia. His publications include: The Foreign Policy of Saudi Arabia: the Formative Years, 1902-1918; he is co-editor of The Soviet-American Competition in the Middle East.

Dr Dina Goren teaches mass communication at Tel-Aviv and Bar-Ilan Universities. She is author of numerous articles on government and media relations. Among her books are: The Press and National Security; Secrecy and the Right to Know; and Communication and Reality.

Professor Ilan Greilsammer is the former chairman of the Department of Political Studies at Bar-Ilan University and the chairman of the Institute for European Studies at Bar-Ilan University. His main fields of specialization are European studies, especially West Europe and the European Community. He has published extensively on these subjects.

Professor Efraim Inbar is an Associate Professor in the Political Science Department and the Chair of the Bar-Ilan Centre for Strategic Studies at Bar-Ilan University. He has published considerably about strategic issues and international politics of Israel and the Middle East.

Dr Efraim Karsh is a reader in the Department of War Studies at King's College in the University of London. His articles about the superpowers and the Middle East and about Middle East affairs have appeared in numerous journals. He has also published or completed books about these subjects, among them: Saddam Hussein: A Political Biography (Free Press 1991), Soviet Policy towards Syria since 1970 (Macmillan 1991) and (with Lawrence Freedman) A War of its Time: A History of the Gulf War (Princeton University Press, forthcoming).

Dr Menachem Klein is a lecturer in the Political Science Department and the Department for Middle East Studies at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. He has investigated the Arab world and the Palestinians. He has published mainly on the PLO, on the meanings of Islam in the Arab World and on the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Dr Yitzhak Klein is a lecturer in the departments of Political Science at the universities of Tel-Aviv and Bar-Ilan. His main fields of teaching, research and publication are Soviet-Russia and post-Soviet studies. He has investigated mainly the Soviet armed forces and foreign policy in the Soviet and post-Soviet periods.

Professor Aharon Klieman is a Professor of International Relations and former chairman, Political Science Department, Tel-Aviv University, as well as a member of the Jaffee Centre for Strategic Studies, under whose auspices his book on Rearming Israel: Defense Procurement Through the 1990s, co-authored with Reuven Pedatzur, was published in 1991. He is also the author of Israel and the World After 40 Years (Pergamon-Brassey's 1991).

Dr Bruce Maddy-Weitzman is a Research Fellow at the Moshe Dayan Centre for Middle Eastern and African Studies, Tel-Aviv University, and was a Visiting Fellow of Middle East Programs at the Carter Center and Visiting Assistant Professor of History at Emory University, 1990-1.

Elizabeth Offen graduated in the Political Science Department at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. The focus of her studies has been on comparative public policy, with an emphasis on international migration policy. Ms Offen has worked in the field of trauma and victimization. From 1985-91 she was the Deputy Director of the Massachusetts Office for Victim Assistance, where she oversaw policy and services affecting all victims of crime. The themes in this paper are expanded upon in her thesis entitled, 'The Persian Gulf War of 1990-1991: an analysis of migration and the security of states' (1992).

Dr Gil Shidlo earned his PhD from the London School of Economics and Political Science and is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Political Science at Tel-Aviv University and a Visiting Professor at the University of Texas at Austin. He has published extensively books and articles on developing countries in the Third World and on Latin America countries.

Professor Robert W. Tucker is a Professor Emeritus, the Johns Hopkins University's Paul Nitze School of Advanced International Studies, and author, with David C. Hendrickson, of The Imperial Temptation, published by the Council on Foreign Relations.

Acknowledgements

We appreciate the co-operation of the various authors who prepared the papers for publication. We also gratefully acknowledge Sarah Shidlo's technical assistance in editing the book. Rose, Pam and Silvia of Tel-Aviv University typed the scripts with great care and patience into an accurate manuscript. Ning Lin of the Institute of Latin American Studies at the University of Texas at Austin assisted in converting the chapters written in numerous word processing languages into one coherent language. Finally, we would like to thank Gordon Smith, Jane Mayger and Catherine Fear at Routledge who helped improve the final manuscript in countless ways.

Gad Barzilai
Aharon Klieman
Gil Shidlo

Contents

List of figures	vii
List of tables	viii
List of contributors	ix
Acknowledgments	xii
Introduction	1
1 Lost in the shuffle: the threatened marginality of the Gulf Crisis for international relations enquiry Aharon Klieman	7
Part I Middle East tremors
2 Continuity and change in the inter-Arab system Bruce Maddy-Weitzman	33
3 Survival at all costs: Saddam Hussein as crisis manager Efraim Karsh	51
4 Saudi Arabia's Desert Storm and winter sandstorm Jacob Goldberg	67
5 The PLO: from Intifada to war and back Menachem Klein	87
6 Migrants and refugees: the human toll Elizabeth N. Offen	103
Part II Israel in the post-Gulf era
7 Society and politics in war: the Israeli case Gad Barzilai	129
8 Strategic consequences for Israel Efraim Inbar	146

Part III Great Power realignment

- |    |   |     |
|----|---|-----|
| 9  | Origins of the new world orderRobert W. Tucker           | 163 |
| 10 | A changing American-Israeli relationshipAbraham Ben-Zvi  | 176 |
| 11 | Soviet policy during the Gulf CrisisYitzhak Klein        | 191 |
| 12 | European reactions to the Gulf challengeIlan Greilsammer | 208 |

Part IV Ripples worldwide

- |    |  |     |
|----|--|-----|
| 13 | Third World arms exports to Iraq before and after theGulf WarGil Shidlo | 231 |
| 14 | Petroleum prices, politics and warGil Feiler                                | 250 |
| 15 | The Gulf War and the mediaDina Goren  | 264 |

Part V Future prospects for calm after the storm

- |    |   |     |
|----|---|-----|
| 16 | Conflict resolution under the veil of uncertainty: theMiddle EastGad Barzilai and Gideon Doron | 279 |
|    | Name Index   | 295 |
|    | Subject index  | 299 |

Figures

6.1 Gulf War migration to Asia, Europe and North America	108
6.2 Gulf War migration within the Middle East	110
16.1 The 'chicken' game	285
16.2 The prisoners' dilemma game between Israel and Egypt	286

Tables

6.1 Stranded foreigners in Kuwait	106
6.2 Remittance of Asian workers in Iraq or Kuwait prior to 1990	120
6.3 Lost remittance earnings from Arab workers	121
13.1 Third World arms exports to Iraq, 1982-90	233
13.2 Arms exports to Iraq by other countries, 1982-90	234
14.1 Gulf countries' excess oil production in April 1990	252
14.2 World petroleum consumption, by region, 1987	253
14.3 World crude oil prices	254

Introduction

The end of the 1980s seemed to suggest a marked decline in the destabilizing role previously played by the Middle East in international affairs. In contrast to dramatic change in the Soviet Union, Central Europe and Germany, the eastern Mediterranean–Gulf sector appeared refreshingly stable. Termination of the Iran–Iraq war in 1988 was one factor; another, the impression that Ayatollah Khomeini's brand of Islamic fundamentalism was not so rampant as previously feared. Similarly, although the Arab–Israeli peace process had produced no breakthrough, nevertheless, the latent conflict did not threaten to escalate into a new war; even the Intifada and turbulence in Lebanon had become fairly routinized. This false sense of stability came to an abrupt end on 2 August 1990 with the Iraqi aggression against Kuwait.

For seven long months the invasion and subsequent annexation of Kuwait dominated the international agenda, reminding one and all of just how unstable and unpredictable the Middle East region can really be even at the best of times.

The crisis in the Gulf affected many more than the regional players alone. Rippling outward, its military, economic and political effects are still being felt throughout the international political system, testing American steadfastness, the effectiveness of the United Nations to confront international aggression, the EC's ability to pose a united front, and the will of 165 states to pursue common security. So, too, the implications for an increasingly interdependent international economic system.

Following the invasion, an international economic embargo was imposed on Iraq. The loss of Iraqi and Kuwaiti oil, plus the threat to Saudi oil facilities, led to a dramatic increase in oil prices affecting both developed and developing economies. Indeed, worldwide concern for oil pricing and market access reinforced strategic and political anxiety at Iraq's military capabilities and possible pretensions at regional hegemony. So immediate and so grave were these anxieties as to give rise to an unprecedented international coalition which then proceeded to rebuke and even humiliate the Iraqis. But the global alliance fell short of defeating the Saddam regime or denying it any future military option. Thus, towards mid-decade the truly critical economic and political problems of the Middle East region continue unsolved. The crisis aftermath is demonstrating once more the illusiveness of stability in this part of the world.

2 Introduction

Yet, at the same time Middle East politics and players have been transformed in a number of important ways by the unsettling Gulf experience. Certainly the three editors of this book have. Prior to August 1990, as colleagues in the political science department at Tel-Aviv University, each of us was preoccupied with our respective areas of teaching and research. Surprised like everyone else at the spreading atmosphere of crisis, in the tense weeks between Saddam's unopposed seizure of Kuwait and the playing out of all the options for avoiding an outright conflict, we were converted into close observers of unfolding events on an expanding chessboard. Once the actual fighting began, but particularly from that unforgettable moment when the first Scud missile without provocation or warning hit Israel, our scholarly pursuits were thrust aside. Finding oneself caught in the middle of a war, with missiles flying overhead, is not exactly conducive to calm reflection, heuristic theory or intellectual breakthroughs. Together with our closest family members, we hunkered down in our improvised, sealed rooms, gas masks at the ready, awaiting each all-clear sound and the next deafening missile alarm siren with equal anxiety.

It was only after the threat had been lifted by Iraq's forced evacuation from Kuwait that we could even begin to seek release from individual suppressed fears and resume our stunted professional activity. In verbalizing these feelings to each other, it became clear that in addition to having experienced first-hand the 'balance of terror' – praxis rather than theoretical abstraction – we were witness to a remarkable international event – quite probably a 'defining moment', and perhaps even system-transforming: one of those rare integrative sequences which bring together personal and impersonal forces; domestic, national, regional and global actors; ideological, social and economic variables as well as technological, political, military and diplomatic ones. From those early post-crisis therapeutic conversations and attempts at putting the whole thing into perspective comes the inspiration for this collaborative effort. That and the twofold conviction that: first, there are abiding insights and lessons to be learned from the Gulf crisis, especially once the dust had settled, rather than instant history or analysis; second, whether for better or worse, the Middle East as a region has every potential for remaining at the epicentre of new world disorder.

Two main issues are at the centre of this collection of original essays. One question is the significance of interactions between domestic politics and the international setting. The second: the wider repercussions of the Gulf crisis. Aharon Klieman's introductory chapter accordingly sets forth a research framework that incorporates the Gulf events into the academic study of world political trends. He stresses that if Gulf-induced renewed interest in strengthening the global community is not to be short-lived, greater effort must go into evaluating how international processes such as realignment and balancing take place over longer periods of time against the backdrop of a changing international order.

Each one of the pieces chosen for this volume was written by an expert in his or her field. We believe this collaboration between historians, regional specialists and political scientists – integrating a variety of research methods in the framework of one book – will be useful to a wide circle of readers. The book itself covers four main areas: the Middle East proper; Israeli domestic and security concerns, Great Power policies and worldwide forces. Opening the first part on 'Middle East Tremors', Bruce Maddy-Weitzman's discussion of the Gulf War centres on enumerating and analysing the elements of both continuity and change in the system of inter-Arab relations in order to provide a more reliable road map for understanding the ever-changing course of Middle East politics. Efraim Karsh explains the latent logic and incentives behind Saddam Hussein's invasion of Kuwait as an aid in understanding his likely future behaviour should he remain in power in Baghdad. Jacob Goldberg, in turn, addresses several lessons about Saudi Arabian domestic and foreign policies; in particular, how and why during the crisis the key word was 'change' while after the war 'restoration' and the 'status quo' became the main theme.

Menachem Klein next analyses the effects of the Gulf War upon the Palestinians. He examines how the PLO entered the war, and with what goals in mind, then contrasts it with the influence the crisis is having upon the organization's internal structure and external policy. In her chapter, Elizabeth Offen deals with the meaning of one of this century's largest and most widespread migrations, whereby more than 5.5 million people from around forty countries were temporarily or permanently displaced by the Persian Gulf.

In the second part of the book, 'Israel in the Post-Gulf Era', Gad

4 Introduction

Barzilai's chapter refers to the tendency of democracies to convert to military societies when their national security faces danger. The broad claim is made that such countries become warlike in character with a tendency not merely to react but to initiate military operations. However, his analysis of the Israeli case during the Gulf War produces different conclusions. Efraim Inbar complements this treatment by focusing on the conduct of the Israeli government in responding to Iraqi provocations with almost uncharacteristic restraint. He probes as well into the larger strategic ramifications of the event for Israel and the consequences of the war for national security in this decade.

In the third part of the book devoted to 'Great Power Realignment', Robert Tucker deals with an issue that surfaced during the war in the Gulf – the new world order. In a profound historical analysis he illuminates the fundamentals of the policy engendered by the Bush Administration, identifying elements of both continuity and change in comparison with previous administrations. Abraham Ben-Zvi's chapter then depicts the war in the Gulf as a screen or prism through which the basic components of the dynamic US-Israel relationship are illuminated. He explains why in a variety of situations potential US power and leverage do not always or necessarily translate automatically into actual power, and discusses whether the current state of American-Israeli ties provides the right environment for a more assertive role by Washington in the Arab-Israeli conflict after the US presidential elections.

Yitzhak Klein considers the problem not of ascendancy or hegemony, but of superpower decline in his chapter on Soviet policy in the Gulf crisis. He nicely illustrates the difficulty the former Soviet Union experienced in adjusting Gulf crisis policy to its own internal weaknesses and strained international circumstances. Klein poses the argument that the Soviet Union attempted to play an independent role in the crisis, yet, in the end merely succeeded in dramatizing that its era as a Middle East actor and global superpower was over. The European Community's reaction to the Gulf crisis is the subject of Ilan Greilsammer's essay, in which he seeks to explain the weakness of the EC at a time of major international crisis as deriving from the inability of the twelve member states to act in a collective and uniform manner.

Our final section, devoted to 'Ripples worldwide', deals essentially with three representative systemic-wide issues – Third World arms exports to Iraq; petroleum prices and war; and the media dimension of the Gulf crisis. Gil Shidlo's chapter provides an overview of the defence production capabilities of four developing countries (Argentina, Brazil, China, Egypt) that exported arms to Iraq – before and after the Gulf War. Gil Feiler raises the important question of whether Saddam's power drive to incorporate Kuwait, de facto, into Iraq comprised the main reason for his invasion (with financial considerations only secondary) or whether in fact financial objectives and his prospects for dominating the oil market were foremost. In her chapter on the media dimension of the War, Dina Goren punctures the myth of a free, objective mass media in times of crisis and conflict by underscoring various forms of control, including secrecy and censorship.

Concluding the essays, Gad Barzilai and Gideon Doron point us to future prospects, by looking at the possibilities for resolving at least one major source of Middle East turbulence, the Arab-Palestinian-Israeli conflict, in light of the structural changes we are witnessing in the international system in the aftermath of the Gulf War.