Our first and greatest debt is to the extraordinary group of distinguished scholars who responded to our call to convene with a view to reflecting upon the state of the discipline of labour law, and its basic conceptual 'building blocks' of 'employee' and 'employer', in this era of globalisation. This meeting took place in May 2005 at the Bellagio Study and Conference Centre, on Lake Como in Northern Italy. We are extremely grateful for the magnificent support of the Rockefeller Foundation in inviting us to hold our workshop at this spectacular venue, which has a long and distinguished history of hosting scholars working in a wide range of disciplines. The contributors to this book all prepared their papers in advance of the workshop and the opportunity to discuss these papers during three full days, in a closed, exceptionally welcoming, and inspiring environment, contributed immensely to the final product before you. Our warm thanks go to the very professional and dedicated staff of the Rockefeller Foundation, both at Bellagio and at the New York office, in particular to Susan Garfield, Nadia Gilardoni and Gianna Celli.

The workshop also enjoyed the collaboration and generous financial support of the International Institute for Labour Studies, Geneva. We wish to convey our deep thanks to the Institute, and in particular to Jean-Pierre Laviec, who, as Acting Director, responded warmly to our request for support, and to Gerry Rodgers, current Director of the Institute.

We are also indebted to Benjamin Aaron, Bob Hepple and Silvana Sciarra, who supported the project as evaluators of our initial proposal; to Harry Arthurs, Paul Benjamin and Mark Freedland, who agreed to assist us by serving as an informal 'organizing committee'; to Pnina Alon-Shenker who provided excellent research assistance; to Einat Geva for administrative assistance; to Annette Henry at the Faculty of Law, University of Toronto, for handling the finances so skilfully; and to Richard Hart for overseeing the publication of this book in such a friendly and professional way.

It has been a very real privilege to be able to draw upon all of these resources—intellectual, material, professional, and personal—in our efforts to make a contribution to the discipline of labour law which, we believe, can only fulfill its destiny through constant critical reflection upon its basic goals and the means for achieving them in the world as we know it.
