

EUROPEAN MONOGRAPHS IN SOCIAL PSYCHOLOGY 13
Series Editor: HENRI TAJFEL

Language, Ethnicity and Intergroup Relations

HOWARD GILES

*Department of Psychology,
University of Bristol, England*

1977 ✓

Published in cooperation with EUROPEAN ASSOCIATION OF EXPERIMENTAL SOCIAL PSYCHOLOGY

by

ACADEMIC PRESS London, New York and San Francisco
A Subsidiary of Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, Publishers

10937

C

ACADEMIC PRESS INC. (LONDON) LTD.
24/28 Oval Road
London NW1

United States Edition published by ACADEMIC PRESS INC.
111 Fifth Avenue
New York, New York 10003

Copyright © 1977 by
ACADEMIC PRESS INC. (LONDON) LTD.

All Rights Reserved

No part of this book may be reproduced in any form by photostat, microfilm or any other means without written permission from the publishers

Library of Congress Catalog Card Number: 77-79303
ISBN 0 12 283740-1

European Monographs in Social Psychology

Series Editor HENRI TAJFEL

E. A. CARSWELL and R. ROMMETVEIT
Social Contexts of Messages, 1971

J. ISRAEL and H. TAJFEL
The Context of Social Psychology: A Critical Assessment, 1972

J. R. EISER and W. STROEBE
Categorization and Social Judgement, 1972

M. VON CRANACH and I. VINE
Social Communication and Movement, 1973

CLAUDINE HERZLICH
Health and Illness: A Social Psychological Analysis, 1973

J. M. NUTTIN, JR. (and Annie Beckers)
The Illusion of Attitude Change: Towards a response contagion theory of persuasion, 1975

H. GILES and P. F. POWESLAND
Speech Style and Social Evaluation, 1975

J. CHADWICK-JONES
Social Exchange Theory: Its Structure and Influence in Social Psychology, 1976

M. BILLIG
Social Psychology and Intergroup Relations, 1976

S. MOSCOVICI
Social Influence and Social Change

R. SANDELL
Linguistic Style and Persuasion

A. HEEN WOLD
Decoding Oral Language

In preparation

H. TAJFEL (Ed.)
Social Comparison and Social Change: Studies in Intergroup Behaviour

Contributors

- RICHARD Y. BOURHIS, Department of Psychology, University of Bristol, Bristol BS8 1HH, England
- MIGUEL A. CARRANZA, Department of Psychology, University of Nebraska, Lincoln, Nebraska 68508, U.S.A.
- ANTONY J. CHAPMAN, Department of Applied Psychology, University of Wales Institute of Science and Technology, Cardiff CF3 7UX, Wales
- ROBERT L. COOPER, School of Education, Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Jerusalem, Israel
- JOHN R. EDWARDS, Educational Research Centre, St. Patrick's College, Dublin 9, Ireland
- JOSHUA A. FISHMAN, Ferkauf Graduate School, Yeshiva University, New York, N.Y. 10003, U.S.A.
- HUGH C. FOOT, Department of Applied Psychology, University of Wales Institute of Science and Technology, Cardiff CF3 7UX, Wales
- HOWARD GILES, Department of Psychology, University of Bristol, Bristol BS8 1HH, England
- CHARLES HUSBAND, School of Social Work, University of Leicester, Leicester LE1 7LA, England
- LINDA LOWN, School of Education, Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Jerusalem, Israel
- ROCH MEYNARD, Department of Psychology, McGill University, Montreal, P.O. Box 6070, Quebec, Canada
- DAVID PARKIN, Department of Anthropology and Sociology, School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London, London WC1E 7HP, England
- ELIZABETH RHEAULT, Department of Psychology, McGill University, Montreal, P.O. Box 6070, Quebec, Canada
- ELLEN BOUCHARD RYAN, Department of Psychology, University of Notre Dame, Notre Dame, Indiana 46556, U.S.A.
- BARBARA SCHAIER, School of Education, Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Jerusalem, Israel

- FERN SECKBACH, School of Education, Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Jerusalem, Israel
- JEAN R. SMITH, Department of Applied Psychology, University of Wales Institute of Science and Technology, Cardiff, CF3 7UX, Wales
- PHILIP M. SMITH, Department of Psychology, University of Bristol, Bristol, BS8 1HH, England
- DONALD M. TAYLOR, Department of Psychology, McGill University, Montreal, P.O. Box 6070, Quebec, Canada
- PETER TRUDGILL, Department of Linguistic Science, University of Reading, Reading RG6 2AA, England
- G. RICHARD TUCKER, Department of Psychology, McGill University, Montreal, P.O. Box 6070, Quebec, Canada
- GEORGE A. TZAVARAS, Department of Linguistic Science, University of Reading, Reading RG6 2AA, England
- ALBERT VERDOODT, Centre de Recherches Sociologiques, Université Catholique de Louvain, B-3000, Belgium

Preface

When we interact with other people on a one-to-one basis, we tend to think of such encounters as examples of an interpersonal process. In fact, however, much of our daily social life is concerned with intergroup behaviour. In other words, we do not just react to people solely as other human beings, our behaviour towards them is often governed by the fact that they are of a particular profession, sex, social class and ethnic group. How much of social behaviour is dependent on such intergroup categorizations is of course an empirical question. However, the importance of social categorization was never so clearly unveiled to me as when writing a previous monograph for this series with Peter Powesland, "Speech Style and Social Evaluation". This volume was concerned with interpersonal perception and speech: how we evaluate others on the basis of their language varieties, and how and why we change our speech style when interacting with others. Although the book was originally conceived of at the inter-individual level, I could not escape the fact that time and time again much of the cognitive activity involved in social communication was related to intergroup behaviour. Even a large number of my own studies which I quoted were in fact concerned with reactions to speakers of various ethnic groups, or with so-called "interpersonal" interactions between members of different ethnolinguistic groups. In short, I was being drawn closer and closer to the conclusion that speech played its most prominent roles in intergroup behaviour. It was not only a potent cue to ethnic (and other social) categorizations, but also a dynamic element in that group members could use it to reduce cultural barriers, or alternatively, to emphasize them.

Fortunately, I was in a position not only to develop these notions with my friends and colleagues, Richard Bourhis and Donald Taylor, but also to be stimulated by the social psychological theory emerging from the work of Henri Tajfel and his co-workers. The present monograph was born with an eye to presenting some theoretical order into a field that is being actively researched across the social sciences. The fact that language, ethnicity and intergroup relations has been studied in an educational, social anthropological, linguistic and sociological context was justification enough for this monograph to take on a multi-disciplinary flavour. But more than that, as a social psychologist, I felt along with my European colleagues that if we are to contribute anything lasting we must not take account of our phenomena in a socio-cultural, or even historical, vacuum. However naïve our initial attempts may now be in this integrative direction, I feel that we need at least a beginning. There seems no better place to start than with the topic of this monograph. Intergroup processes are an integral part of our social behaviour and language behaviour an essential feature of that.

I am extremely grateful to Donald Taylor for his advice and support during the compilation of this volume. Finally, I am indebted to Henri Tajfel without whose theory and encouragement this monograph would never have appeared.

HOWARD GILES

October 1977

正是我当年之考之时

是书分为
部：语言
载体

Contents

Contributors

Preface

Introductory Essay

H. GILES

References

1. Language and Ethnicity

J. A. FISHMAN

What is ethnicity?

Paternity

Patrimony

Phenomenology

The recurring symbolic role of language in the ethnicity experience

The role of boundaries in ethnicity

Mutability of ethnicity

Mutability of content

Mutability of membership

Mutability of saliency

The manipulation of ethnicity

Civility, rationality and individuality

Conclusions

Notes

References

2. Ingroup and Outgroup Reactions to Mexican American Language Varieties

E. BOUCHARD RYAN and M. A. CARRANZA

English versus Spanish

Varieties of Spanish

Varieties of English

Methodological considerations

Conclusions

Notes

References

3. Language, Technology and Persuasion in the Middle East: Three experimental studies

R. L. COOPER, J. A. FISHMAN, L. LOWN, B. SCHAIER and F. SECKBACH	83
Introduction	83
The Jericho study	86
The first Jerusalem study—university students	90
The second Jerusalem study—housewives	92
Summary and discussion	96
References	98

4. Threat to Ethnic Identity and Second-Language Learning

D. M. TAYLOR, R. MEYNARD and E. RHEAULT	99
Teaching a second language	100
Individual characteristics and second-language learning	101
Social determinants of second-language learning	102
Method	105
Results and discussion	106
Summary and conclusions	116
References	117

5. The Language of Intergroup Distinctiveness

R. Y. BOURHIS and H. GILES	119
Introduction	119
Method	122
Subjects	122
Experimental setting and materials	123
Procedure	123
Results	125
Analysis of speech changes	125
Verbal content	127
Ss' perceptions of the situations	128
Discussion	128
Notes	132
Appendix 1A	133
Appendix 1B	134
References	134

6. Language, Humour and Intergroup Relations

A. J. CHAPMAN, J. R. SMITH and H. C. FOOT	137
The Welsh language: its demise and revival	138
The Welsh language: a major dimension of ethnic identity in Welsh adults	141
The Welsh language: a major dimension of ethnic identity in children at Welsh-medium primary schools	145
Ethnic humour	147

An ethnic humour experiment on young children in Wales	151
Brief résumé: introduction to experiment	151
Results and discussion	162
Notes	166
References	166
7. Why Albanian-Greeks are not Albanians: Language Shift in Attica and Biotia
P. TRUDGILL and G. A. TZAVARAS	171
Problems	173
Attitudes	175
Ethnicity	178
Notes	183
References	184
8. Emergent and Stabilized Multilingualism: Polyethnic Peer Groups in Urban Kenya
D. PARKIN	185
Stabilized multilingualism and ethnic polarization	188
Emergent multilingualism and ethnic polarization	190
Nairobi: a political profile	190
A Nairobi speech community	192
The process of ethnic polarization among the young: case material from Nairobi	194
Analysis	198
Conclusions	201
Notes	208
References	209
9. News Media, Language and Race Relations: A Case Study in Identity Maintenance
C. HUSBAND	211
The consolidation of English as a racist language	212
News media: newsworthiness and the construction of news from events	215
Race relations: the news media and definitions of the situation	218
Race relations: news media language crystallized in headlines	222
Reporting race relations: the news media as an agent of identity maintenance	229
Notes	235
References	236

10.	Educational Policies on Languages: The Case of the Children of Migrant Workers
	A. VERDOODT	241
	The issues	243
	References	251
11.	Ethnic Identity and Bilingual Education
	J. R. EDWARDS	253
	Language, ethnicity and nationalism	254
	Indigenous minorities	256
	Immigrants	261
	Ethnic identity and bilingual education	267
	Bilingual education: roles and aims	268
	Bilingual education and social change	270
	Bilingual education and ethnicity	271
	Conclusions	276
	Notes	278
	References	279
12.	Language, Ethnic Identity and Intergroup Relations: One Immigrant Group's Reactions to Language Planning in Québec
	P. M. SMITH, G. R. TUCKER and D. M. TAYLOR	283
	The situation in Québec	284
	Language planning in Québec	285
	An ethnic community in Montreal	288
	The present study	289
	Method	290
	Results and discussion	293
	The influence of SES	294
	The influence of ethnic identity	300
	Conclusions	303
	Notes	305
	References	305
13.	Towards a Theory of Language in Ethnic Group Relations
	H. GILES, R. Y. BOURHIS and D. M. TAYLOR	307
	Ethnolinguistic vitality: a structural analysis	308
	Status factors	310
	Demographic factors	312
	Institutional support factors	315
	Intergroup relations and speech accommodation: sociopsychological analyses	318
	Tajfel's theory of intergroup relations	318
	Giles's theory of speech accommodation	321
	Language and ethnic group relations: a theoretical analysis	324
	Social categorization	325

CONTENTS

xiii

Social identity	325
Social comparison	328
Psychological distinctiveness	329
Cognitive alternatives	331
Group strategies for social change	335
Conclusions	343
Notes	344
References	344

Index

349

Introductory Essay

H. Giles

The content of this book is concerned with the interrelationships between language, ethnicity and ethnic group relations. Many authors have discussed the linkage between language and ethnicity (Fishman, 1972; Taylor and Simard, 1975; Lambert, in press), yet few have linked these to the dynamics of inter-ethnic group relations in a testable theoretical fashion. Moreover, when one looks at social psychological accounts of intergroup relations, little attention is afforded language processes (LeVine and Campbell, 1972; Doise, 1976). This is somewhat surprising given the current vitality of language issues all around the world. One recalls the Soweto riots in South Africa in the summer of 1976 when large numbers of Blacks and Whites were killed. The catalyst of this situation was a language issue. When the confrontation with police occurred, Black students along with adults were protesting the White government's insistence that their educational curricula be presented in the Afrikaans language. In commenting on this situation to the press,* Black leaders made the following statement:

... the situation has unearthed the innermost frustrations of Black people which were hidden from the outside world. Although there is a prevalent belief in some quarters that Afrikaans as a medium of instruction was not a direct positive factor in these riots, this is not so. Afrikaans was forced down Black students just as much as the Trust Land Act, pass laws, and migratory labour ...

For Black people in South Africa, Afrikaans is seen as a very potent symbol of White domination and oppression (cf. Vorster and Proctor, 1976). It can be argued that their being forced to imbibe it (in accumulation with other factors) was perceived by Blacks as an intolerant, abhorrent attack on their social identity.

*Reported in The Times (London), June 23rd. 1976.

Other examples of the impact of language spoken in ethnic group contexts abound (see Fishman, 1972), but given that succeeding chapters are devoted to many such issues, mention will be made of only a few more. In the same summer of 1976, commercial air services at Montreal's airports were halted for a week when Québécois air controllers engaged in industrial action for a refusal at their not being allowed to use French as a medium of air communications. Indeed, this (essentially language) dispute was described by the Canadian Prime Minister as potentially the most divisive the country had faced for 30 years. Some Australians at this time also began to question the existence of their own distinctive cultural identity and the way in which they had assimilated to American and European traditions. In an article* about the "Australian Renaissance" (Ockerism), attention was drawn to language as a core issue in the group's identity:

... Americanization of the language is much more significantly pervasive than the high incidence of skate-boards and roadside fast food parlours. . . . The American invasion of the Australian stomach was always on the cards. But the invasion of the language is less easy to laugh off . . .

Finally, Hancock (1974) observed that "one Afro-American Peace Corps volunteer was quite hurt to learn that the Sierra Leoneans referred to him as oyimbo, 'white man', not because of his appearance but because of his language and behaviour".

As can be seen, these issues have ramifications at all levels of social life, in government legislation, educational policies, mass media, inter-group communication, individual attitudes and behaviour, etc. With this in mind, this book presents original contributions from authorities in various disciplines in the general area of language and ethnic identity. In the final chapter, an attempt is made to integrate these diverse, yet complementary, approaches into a theoretical framework where none as yet exists. At the same time, however, there are no intentions of making extreme statements about any glorified role of language in inter-ethnic relations. In fact, two chapters (one by Trudgill and Tzavaras, and the other by Edwards) question the overriding significance of language as the symbol of cultural identity and whether cultural pluralism through educational policies is necessarily a desirable venture in all instances. Therefore, an important aim of this book is to address itself to the following questions: Is language important in ethnic group relations? Just how important is it, and why? How is it employed by dominant and subordinate ethnic groups? Naturally enough, no definitive answers to these questions will ultimately be presented. Nevertheless, suggestions will be offered, and methodologies for future study will be presented together with a theoretical framework in which to examine these issues.

*Reported in the Observer Review (London), June 27th. 1976. In this regard, see Fox (1968), and Parkin's discussion of it in Chapter 8.

The succeeding chapters are intended to give the reader an impression of the interrelationships between language, ethnicity and intergroup relations at a dynamic level. For instance, chapters address themselves not only to how a subordinate ethnic ingroup perceives its own language and that of the outgroup and how it uses language in interaction with it, but also how this dominant outgroup itself responds to the ingroup's actions and maintains its power and superiority and distinctiveness over them. It will be noticed that the term "language" is not meant in any restrictive fashion to imply simply discrete languages, such as French or English. Indeed, it will be argued later (Chapter 13) that such a limitation has constrained theory in this area long enough. Language will refer to any linguistic feature, or set of features (e.g. dialects, accents, words)* which an ethnic group values or uses in making itself distinctive from a competing outgroup. The succeeding chapters will now be briefly outlined with the admission that it will be biased in the direction of my own theoretical predilection; much of the inherent richness of each chapter will then of necessity escape this review.

In Chapter 1, Fishman looks at the relationship between ethnicity and language from a basically phenomenological perspective, that is, in terms of how an ethnic group conceptualizes its collectivity and experience. It is argued that at the outset, we need to understand ethnicity as a construct before we can hope to understand the linkage between it and language behaviour. In this way, he discusses the experience of ethnicity that group members feel they have inherited from their birthright (their paternity) and the ways in which they express this behaviourally (their patrimony). Fishman considers the ways in which language functions for these two elements by showing how it transmits feelings of ancestral continuity and can be used by group members expressively and symbolically. He argues that language can often be the most salient symbol of ethnicity because it carries the past and expresses present and future attitudes and aspirations. Fishman also examines the ways in which the experience of ethnicity may change for group members from time to time. It is important to note, however, that these formulations are not always Fishman's personal views as much as his attempt to report the ethnicity experiences of those who are intimately involved with them. This dynamic account of the experiential nature of what ethnicity is, and how language is so intimately related to it, is an invaluable starting point for examining this relationship in specific intergroup contexts.

* For a short discussion of the distinctions between languages, dialects and accents, see Giles and Powesland (1975).

Ryan and Carranza in Chapter 2 take up the symbolic role of language in the context of Mexican American-Anglo American relations in the Southwest of the United States. Their chapter reviews extensively the empirical research (including their own) into ingroup and outgroup attitudes to Mexican American speech. Despite large differences between the studies in their methodological procedures which makes clear interpretation difficult, the authors discuss the problems involved for a subordinate ethnic group to use its language varieties as symbols of cultural pride under assimilationist pressures from the Anglo dominant group. In fact, such pressures often cause many individuals to attempt to leave the subordinate group and join the dominant one as depicted in Fishman's discussion of changing ethnic allegiances. Nevertheless, a positive redefinition of Mexican American identity is coming about in terms of the Chicanoismo revival, and Ryan and Carranza show how Spanish and its local Mexican dialects are viewed as symbols of ingroup solidarity, particularly by females and the young in certain social contexts. This chapter also cautiously points out that it is necessary not to consider an ethnic group as homogeneous (an issue we shall take up in Chapter 13); within the group exist many identifiable and diverse subgroups. Except for certain Mexican Americans who have adopted the positive self-referent, "Chicano", various degrees of Mexican-accented English do not (as yet) appear as symbols of group identity. However, the fact that these people still use Mexican-American-influenced English may, it is argued, be a deliberate tactic to hold on to their identity when using the outgroup language. Nevertheless, adoption of the outgroup language does have its social rewards in terms of attitudes of perceived competence and status, even among the ingroup.

Cooper, Fishman, Lown, Schaier and Seckbach in Chapter 3 also present data in different cultural contexts which suggest that adoption