PREFACE

No one is more acutely aware than we of the rapid change and expansion to which employment law is currently subject. The larger size of this volume as compared with others in this series is a reflection of that expansion and of the need to incorporate a considerable amount of statutory material. We hope in our selection of material to have provided a coherent account of labour law today. Whilst we do not suggest that those with access to a law library should regard this volume as a substitute for a library, we do hope that those who are forced by circumstances so to regard it will find it an adequate substitute. Where appropriate, references in the cases to now repealed statutes have been rendered in the casenotes as references to the relevant clauses in the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Bill. This volume finally went to press in September 1977; it has, however, been possible to incorporate one or two subsequent developments. Our grateful thanks go to our long-suffering wives, especially to Judith Schofield who undertook much of the typing; to all those who over the course of time were involved in typing and deciphering the manuscripts; and to the staff of our publishers. The sole advantage in collaborating in the writing of a book appears to be that each may claim that errors are the responsibility of the other.
