The Brussels I Review Proposal Uncovered

Edited by EVA LEIN

British Institute of International and Comparative Law

THE BRUSSELS I REVIEW PROPOSAL UNCOVERED

Edited by

Eva Lein

British Institute of International and Comparative Law

Published and Distributed by
The British Institute of International and Comparative Law
Charles Clore House, 17 Russell Square, London WC1B 5JP

British Library Cataloguing in Publication Data
A Catalogue record of this book is available from the British Library

ISBN 978-1-905221-48-6

Typeset by Cambrian Typesetters
Camberley, Surrey
Printed in Great Britain by MPG Books Group Ltd

THE BRUSSELS I REVIEW PROPOSAL UNCOVERED

Contributors

Eva Lein is Herbert Smith Senior Research Fellow in Private International Law at the British Institute of International and Comparative Law in London. She previously held the position of Head of the Continental Law Section and Staff Legal Advisor at the Swiss Institute of Comparative Law in Lausanne, Switzerland. She is a qualified German lawyer and her fields of expertise are comparative, European and private international law. Her Dr Jur focused on European, international and comparative contract law, but she has also extensively published on European private international law. She has lectured comparative law, conflict of laws and international litigation in England, Italy, Spain and Switzerland. She is also an advisory board member of the Yearbook of Private International Law.

Pamela Kiesselbach is a Senior Professional Support Lawyer with Herbert Smith LLP, London, and a Senior Lecturer at the College of Law. Pamela is a dually qualified German lawyer and English solicitor specialising in dispute resolution and private international law. When practising she acted for clients from a wide range of industry sectors including energy, aviation and telecommunications, mostly in relation to cross-border disputes. More recently she has been involved in providing responses to the European Commission's Green Paper on the Review of the Brussels Regulation and the related Brussels I survey and has given presentations and published various contributions in relation to the Rome I, Rome II and Brussels I Regulations. She monitors and edits the firm's model forms and notes and advises across the firm in London and internationally in relation to choice of law and jurisdiction issues.

Jonathan Harris is a Professor of International Commercial Law at King's College London, Visiting Professorial Fellow at the University of New South Wales, Australia, and a barrister at Serle Court Chambers in London. He was previously Professor of International Commercial Law and Deputy Head of School at the University of Birmingham, and Reader in Law at the University of Nottingham. He holds an MA and BCL from Oxford University, and a PhD from the University of Birmingham. Professor Harris has written and edited numerous publications, including Dicey, Morris and Collins: The Conflict of Laws and Benjamin's Sale of Goods, and is a co-editor and co-founder of The Journal of Private International Law.

Alegría Borrás is Professor of Private International Law at the University of Barcelona. She has been Spain's representative at The Hague Conference on Private International Law since 1987, and was the Spanish representative for Cooperation on Justice (Civil Matters) in the EU from 1993 – 2007. In 1994 and 2005 she was a Professor at the Academy of International Law in The Hague, and has also held positions at the University of Cordoba and the Autonomous University of Barcelona. Professor Borrás has written and published over 200 articles on private international and European community law, and has been Director of the Revista Española de Derecho internacional since 2009. She holds a Doctorate in Law from the University of Barcelona, and has been awarded the Spanish honours of the Orden de San Raimundo de Peñafort and Encomienda de la Orden de Isabel La Católica.

Alexander Layton QC is a barrister at 20 Essex Street Chambers in London, practicing in Commercial Law, Arbitration, and Private and Public International Law. He was called to the Bar in 1976, took silk in 1995, and is now a Recorder, sitting in both civil and criminal cases, a Deputy High Court Judge, and a Bencher of the Middle Temple. Alexander Layton studied at Oxford University, Ludwig-Maximilian University Munich, and the Faculté Internationale pour l'Enseignement de Droit Comparé in Strasbourg and Pescara. He is general editor of European Civil Practice, the leading practitioners' textbook on conflicts of law and jurisdiction in Europe, is recognised as an expert on the Brussels-Lugano jurisdictional regime, and frequently lectures on topics of commercial and private international law in the UK and abroad. He is a fellow of the Chartered Institute of Arbitrators, a member of the Commercial Bar Association, and former Chairman of the Board of Trustees of BIICL.

Ulrich Magnus is Professor emeritus of Civil Law, Private International Law and Comparative Law at the University of Hamburg and a former judge of the Civil Court of Appeal of Hamburg. He received his Dr Jur from the University of Heidelberg. Professor Magnus is a Director of the European Centre of Tort and Insurance Law and a Director of the International Max Planck Research School for Maritime Affairs. He was previously a Research Fellow at the Max-Planck-Institute for Foreign and International Private Law in Hamburg, and has acted as an advisor to the German Government and the European Commission. He has published extensively on European, comparative and international law of obligations and private international law and is co-editor of Magnus/Mankowski, European Commentaries on Private International Law: Brussels I Regulation.

Pippa Rogerson is a Senior Lecturer in the Faculty of Law, Cambridge University, and a Fellow and Director of Studies of Gonville and Caius College. She holds an MA and PhD from Cambridge, and prior to commencing her PhD she qualified as a solicitor with Clifford Chance LLP.

Dr Rogerson has published extensively on the subject of conflict of laws, and is an author of Magnus/Mankowski, European Commentaries on Private International Law: Brussels I Regulation. She has a particular academic interest in relation to intangible property and issues concerning corporations, and also teaches company law.

Michael Bogdan is Professor of Comparative and Private International Law at the University of Lund. He holds a BA, LLM and juris doctor from Lund, as well as JUDr from the University of Prague. Professor Bogdan is a member and former president of the Groupe Européen de Droit International Privé, member of the International Academy of Comparative Law and associated member of the Institut de Droit International. In 2010 he was invited to give the General Course on Private International Law at The Hague Academy of International Law. Professor Bogdan is the author of 12 books and more than 400 articles and reviews on various legal subjects.

Andrew Dickinson is Professor in Private International Law at the University of Sydney, a Visiting Fellow at BIICL, and a consultant at Clifford Chance LLP. He obtained an MA and BCL from the University of Oxford. Professor Dickinson is a specialist editor of Dicey, Morris and Collins: The Conflict of Laws, and the author of The Rome II Regulation: The Law Applicable to Non-Contractual Obligations. He is a member of the UK Ministry of Justice's Advisory Committee on Private International Law, of the editorial board of the Journal of Private International Law, and of the Hague Conference's expert working group on the law applicable to contractual obligations.

Andreas Furrer is Professor of Private, Comparative, Private International and European Law at the University of Lucerne, Switzerland, and a partner at Meyer Müller Eckert in Zurich. He is also Head of the Research Centre for International and European Private Law, Director of the Centre for Conflict Resolution, and Vice-Chancellor of the Research Committee at the University of Lucerne, as well as the Managing Director the Swiss Arbitration Academy. Professor Furrer studied at the Universities of Freiburg, Saarbrücken, St Gallen, Bremen and the European University Institute in Florence, gaining full professorial status in 2001.

Luboš Tichý is Professor of European, Private International and Comparative Law at Charles University Prague, where he is also Director of the Centre for Comparative Law. He studied in Prague, Heidelberg, and at the Max Planck Institute for Comparative and International Private Law in Hamburg, the Swiss Institute of Comparative Law in Lausanne and The Hague Academy of International Law. Professor Tichý is a board member of the Academic Society for Competition Law, a member of the European Centre of Tort and Insurance Law, and a member of the advisory board of three European journals including the European Review of Private Law. Professor Tichý has been a practicing lawyer in Prague since 1976, and was formerly a partner at Squire Sanders LLP and President of the Czech Bar Association. He has been a Legal Advisor to the Czech Federal Minister of Foreign Affairs and to the President of the Czech National Council.

Marta Pertegás is First Secretary at the Hague Conference of Private International Law and Professor of Private International Law at the University of Antwerp. She is a qualified advocate at the Barcelona Bar, and was an associate at Nauta Dutilh in Brussels practicing in the fields of international litigation and intellectual property. She was previously a lecturer at the Catholic University of Leuven, where she was also an Assistant at the Institute of International Trade Law. Professor Pertegás has published extensively on the subjects of conflict of laws and international litigation and regularly lectures throughout Europe on European and private international law.

Foreword

This book, originating in an all-day conference hosted by the British Institute of International and Comparative Law, appears at a useful moment. The process of revising the Brussels I Regulation 44/2001 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters is under way, and bound to continue well into 2012.

The United Kingdom took the decision to opt into that process in Spring 2011. The process can be viewed at two levels. The first, technical, concerns all who look for just, pragmatic and workable solutions to the procedural problems and tactical manoeuvring that can beset international disputes. The second, constitutional, arises from the interplay between decisions of the Court of Justice of the European Union, concerns about their effect, the Commission's willingness to respond to such concerns, the Parliament's reaction to the Commission's consequent proposals and the forthcoming negotiations involving the Council, the Parliament and the Commission.

At the technical level, the problems are well-known. The Court of Justice has insisted unremittingly on two themes: certainty and an obligation of mutual trust between Member States in each other's legal systems. Its decisions have led to concerns about the efficacy in a European context of choice of court clauses (Case C-116/02 – Gasser v Misat) and arbitration clauses (Case C-185/07 – Allianz SpA v West Tankers), as well as about a jurisprudence applying the existing Regulation in relation to third countries with regard to which litigants do not (apparently) enjoy any of the protections which exist where only Member States are involved (Case C-281/02 – Owusu v Jackson and the "Lugano" Opinion C-1/03 of 7 February 2006, para 153). Professor Jonathan Harris and Dr Eva Lein note that, far from promoting the internal market, some of the results may be positively detrimental to it.

The work addresses such concerns from the standpoint of both common and civilian lawyers, it outlines the Commission's proposals and the Parliament's present position, and it discusses the issues arising and makes positive suggestions as to how they may best be addressed.

It also addresses the Commission's other main aims. One is to harmonise and limit the grounds of jurisdiction in relation to defendants domiciled outside any Member State. The Parliament, rightly, regarded such attempt as inopportune. The Commission's reasoning for pressing this fails to convince. The limited grounds of jurisdiction which it contemplates (largely modelled on the internal European grounds) would, by superseding a well-tested English jurisdictional code developed over a long period to meet the needs of English civil and commercial litigation, inflict a gratuitous blow on English courts' ability to adjudicate comprehensively or at all in a significant number of cases currently coming before them. This would be detrimental to the overall bundle of business, financial and legal services which London presently offers. Whether it would be within the EU's competence is, one hopes, an issue that can remain academic.

The Commission's other main aim is less radical. It is to simplify enforcement by abolishing wherever possible any requirement of exequatur, and so to permit automatic enforcement of judgments as between Member States without any prior procedure for their recognition or registration. The Commission wishes moreover to remove any public policy defence to enforcement. In relation to these proposed changes, Professor Andrew Dickinson rightly notes the need for greater protection for defendants against misuse and the poverty of the argument for removing any public policy defence.

At the constitutional level, the process must be seen as encouraging. Giving evidence to the House of Lords European Union Select Committee enquiry into the Lisbon Treaty (10th Report of Session 2007–08, HL Paper 62-I), Sir David Edward wondered whether the Brussels regime was really appropriate for the jurisdiction of the Court of Justice, and whether it might not have been better to create a tribunal consisting of civil judges of Member States who would sit every three or four months, with the necessary expertise, and would have a much clearer understanding of the practical problems of jurisdiction (S38, Q133). As he went on to recognise, the Lisbon Treaty was, however, concerned with very different issues. Maybe, one day, the idea will be pursued of a form of specialist chamber, to deal not only with jurisdictional issues, but also with the other civil law issues which are bound to arise with the EU's increasing activity in this field.

As matters stand, however, credit is due to the Commission for its energetic and positive reaction to perceived problems revealed or caused by the Court of Justice's jurisprudence, and highlighted by academic and practitioner comment. The Parliament's engagement is equally welcome. The negotiations between the representatives of Member States, the Commission and the Parliament will, one also trusts, prove Europe's ability to address such problems on a broad and sensible basis. A major concern for the United Kingdom will clearly have to be to ensure that there is no compulsory harmonisation and limitation of grounds of jurisdiction in relation to third country domiciliaries.

All these topics are discussed in the present book in wide-ranging and stimulating terms. The book will be a valuable guide to the issues, and a pointer to the way in which some might constructively be resolved. It is my pleasure to commend it to the many practising and academic lawyers, insurers, business people and others interested directly or indirectly in issues of jurisdiction or of recognition and enforcement of foreign judgments.

LORD MANCE

Contents

The Brussels I Review Proposal – An Overview

*Pamela Kiesselbach

I. INTRODUCTION

On 14 December 2010 the European Commission published its Proposal [1] for changes to the Regulation 44/2001 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters ('Brussels I Regulation'). This Proposal was preceded by detailed studies – the Heidelberg Report on the application of the Brussels I Regulation in the Member States[2] and the Nuyts Report on residual jurisdiction,[3] both published in September 2007, and the Commission's Report and Green Paper, published on 21 April 2009.[4] The Commission's Proposal is extensive and relates to a number of central topics within the Brussels I Regulation. Many of them are controversial.

This chapter will aim to provide an overview of the perceived shortcomings of the Brussels I Regulation in its current form, followed by a summary of the key proposals made by the Commission and of the reactions to these proposals, as expressed by the European Parliament and during the consultations initiated by the Ministry of Justice of the United Kingdom. This chapter will conclude with an outlook on what is likely to happen next.

II. THE BRUSSELS I REGULATION – PERCEIVED SHORTCOMINGS

Although the general perception is that the Brussels I Regulation has been

* Professional Support Lawyer at Herbert Smith LLP and Senior Lecturer at the College of Law.

[1] Proposal for a Regulation of the European Parliament and of the Council on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters (Recast), COM(2010) 748 final.

[2] B Hess, T Pfeiffer and P Schlosser, The Brussels I Regulation 44/2001 – Application and Enforcement in the EU ('Heidelberg Report') (Beck, Hart, Nomos 2008).

[3] A Nuyts, Study on Residual Jurisdiction 2007.

[4] Green Paper on the Review of Council Regulation (EC) No 44/2001 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters, COM(2009) 175 final; Report from the Commission to the European Parliament, the Council and the European Economic and Social Committee on the application of Council Regulation (EC) No 44/2001 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters, COM(2009) 174 final.

a success and is working well, there are a number of key areas which are considered to require improvements.

A. The free circulation of judgments

Currently, judgments originating from the court of an EU Member State need to be either declared enforceable or registered by the enforcing court before enforcement measures can be taken in another Member State. Studies have shown that this process, which is known as 'exequatur', is potentially both costly and time-consuming. The studies have also shown that in more than 90% of cases the procedure is a pure administrative (and therefore, it is argued, unnecessary) formality, due to the absence of grounds for refusing the recognition or enforcement of the judgments. The cost and time factor inherent in the exequatur process is further exacerbated where a judgment creditor seeks to enforce a judgment across a number of Member States, as the judgment will need to be declared enforceable or registered in each Member State in which enforcement is sought. This is seen as an unnecessary burden on cross-border trade and contrary to the aim of the Brussels I Regulation of enabling the free circulation of judgments in the EU.

B. The operation of the Brussels I Regulation in the international legal order

Currently, the jurisdiction rules in the Brussels I Regulation only apply where the defendant is domiciled in an EU Member State (Articles 2, 5 and 6) or is deemed to be domiciled there (Articles 9(2), 15(2) and 18(2)), or at least one of the parties to a choice of court agreement is domiciled in a Member State (Article 23) or certain subject matters of the proceedings are located in a Member State (Article 22). Where these connecting factors do not exist, the national rules on jurisdiction continue to apply in order to determine whether a Member State court has jurisdiction to hear a dispute (Article 4).

These rules differ considerably from Member State to Member State and, the concern is, provide unequal access to justice for claimants across the EU, particularly where jurisdiction is based on the nationality of the claimant (as is the case in Luxembourg and France). There is a further concern that the different national rules result in non-EU defendants being treated 'less favourably' than EU domiciled defendants where the national rules are 'exorbitant' in nature.[5] Also, where the national rules do not provide for the jurisdiction of a Member State court, this could result in a potential loss of protection afforded by mandatory EU legislation protecting weaker parties (eg consumers, employees and insured).

[5] See A Briggs and P Rees, Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments (5th edn, Informa Law 2009) para 7.04.

A separate category of issues has arisen as a result of Owusu v Jackson,[6] in which the Court of Justice of the European Union (CJEU) held that the jurisdiction rules in the Brussels I Regulation, in particular the basic rule in Article 2 based upon the defendant's domicile, are mandatory in nature and cannot be departed from in favour of another, in particular non-EU jurisdiction, even if the dispute is more closely connected to that jurisdiction and that jurisdiction is clearly the more appropriate forum. In other words, the common law concept of being able to stay proceedings on the basis of forum non conveniens grounds does not apply within the context of the Brussels I Regulation.

As a result of Owusu there is uncertainty whether a Member State court must also take jurisdiction in accordance with the Brussels I Regulation (ie may not stay or dismiss proceedings), even where the parties have entered into a(n) (exclusive) choice of court agreement in favour of a non-EU court, or the subject matter of the dispute as identified in Article 22 is located outside the EU, or earlier proceedings relating to the same cause of action and the same parties have been commenced in the courts of a non-EU country. These are questions which the CJEU expressly declined to answer in Owusu. There are voices in legal writings which advocate a 'reflexive'[7] application of the rules in Articles 22, 23, 27 and 28 in these cases which would allow (or even require) EU Member State courts to dismiss proceedings in favour of the relevant non-EU state court.[8] However, the matter remains uncertain in the absence of an express ruling by the CJEU (which according to its comments in Opinion 1/03 relating to the new Lugano Convention appears to suggest that it does not favour a reflexive effect[9]) or of (clarifying) changes to the Brussels I Regulation.

C. The efficacy of choice of court agreements

The ability of parties to determine the court that will decide disputes arising

[6] CJEU, C-281/02 Owusu v Jackson [2005] ECR I-1383.

[7] See also the contribution of A Layton, in this publication.

[8] See the discussions in GC Cheshire, P North and JJ Fawcett, Private International Law (14th edn, OUP 2008) 333; AV Dicey, JHC Morris and L Collins, The Conflict of Laws, vol. I (14th edn, Sweet & Maxwell 2006) paras 12-021–12-022; A Briggs and P Rees (n 5) paras 2.256–2.260; see also the remarks delivered by Alexander Layton QC to the Legal Affairs Committee of the European Parliament on 5 October 2009 in which he states that '...it is plainly unsustainable in today's conditions for Community law to require that choice of court agreements in favour of non-Member State courts be overridden in favour of the adjudicatory powers of the courts of Member States. Urgent reform is needed.'

[9] See para 153 of the CJEU Opinion 1/03 dated 7 February 2006, relating to the competence of the EU to conclude the New Lugano Convention.

between them is of considerable importance to the international commercial community.

However, the current interrelationship between Article 23, which gives effect to a parties' choice of court agreement, and Article 27, which contains the lis pendens rule, undermines the efficacy of choice of court agreements in an EU context. Article 27 requires a Member State court to stay its proceedings if another Member State court has been first seised of proceedings involving the same cause of action and between the same parties and to allow the court first seised to determine whether or not it has jurisdiction. The fact that this rule applies also where the first court has been seised in breach of a choice of court agreement and the second court is the chosen court was established by the CJEU in Erich Gasser v MISAT.[10] This allows a party to obstruct the bringing of proceedings in the chosen Member State court by bringing a 'torpedo' action in another Member State court (albeit in violation of the choice of court agreement). This problem is magnified where such violating proceedings are brought in a Member State court whose procedural rules do not provide for the determination of jurisdiction as a preliminary issue or in an otherwise speedy manner.

Further, the Commission has signed the 2005 Hague Convention on Choice of Court Agreements (Hague Convention) which allows the chosen court to continue proceedings regardless of whether parallel proceedings have been brought first in another court (Article 5), and which requires any court seised in breach of a choice of court agreement to suspend or dismiss its proceedings (Article 6). If ratified, the Hague Convention will apply where at least one of the parties to the agreement is a resident of a Contracting State other than an EU Member State, whereas the equivalent Brussels I rules will apply where at least one party is domiciled in an EU Member State and none of the parties to the agreement is domiciled in a Contracting State which is not also an EU Member State.

The concern is that different rules relating to the efficacy of choice of court agreements will give rise to confusion and complications and that the Brussels I regime should be brought in line with the Hague Convention in order to facilitate its ratification by the EU as soon as the Brussels I reforms have been finalised.

D. 'Torpedo' actions in patent claims

Article 27 is considered to lead to particular difficulties in patent actions. The lis pendens rule allows a party which faces the prospect of an infringement action being brought in a 'quick' jurisdiction to bring a pre-emptive action (eg for a declaration of non-liability) in the courts of a 'slow' jurisdiction (even though these courts may not have jurisdiction). Such pre-emptive proceedings would block any subsequent proceedings being brought in the competent courts pending a decision by the first seised court on its jurisdiction.

[10] CJEU, C-116/02 Erich Gasser GmbH v MISAT Srl [2005] QB 1.

A further difficulty arises as a result of the interrelationship between Articles 27 and 22. The CJEU in Overseas Union Insurance v New Hampshire Insurance[11] left open the question whether the lis pendens rule also applied where the court second seised had exclusive jurisdiction under Article 16 of the 1968 Brussels Convention on Jurisdiction and the Enforcement of Judgments in Civil and Commercial Matters (Brussels Convention), the predecessor of Article 22 of the Brussels I Regulation. It was further decided in GAT v Luk[12] that where a party in a patent action raises the issue of validity of the patent by way of defence this will trigger the exclusive jurisdiction under Article 16 of the Brussels Convention (now Article 22(4) of the Brussels I Regulation). The combination of these two decisions raises the question of whether there is an exception to the lis pendens rule where the court seised second has exclusive jurisdiction under Article 22(4).[13] This would mean that a defendant in an infringement action could divert any proceedings to the courts of the Member State in which the patent was registered by simply raising the validity defence.

There is a sense that as a result of how the Brussels I Regulation rules operate in industrial property matters there is too much scope for the (prospective) defendant to manipulate and obstruct any infringement actions against him.

The latter problem can potentially also arise in the context of insurance or consumer contracts where the proceedings brought second can rely on the special jurisdiction rules set out in sections 3 (insurance contracts) and 4 (consumer contracts) of the Brussels I Regulation and a judgment of the court first seised made in breach of these protective rules would not be recognised in accordance with Article 35(1).

E. The interface between the Brussels I Regulation and arbitration

Although Article 1(2)(d) provides for the exclusion of arbitration from the scope of the Brussels I Regulation, the delineation of this exclusion has recently become blurred as a result of the CJEU decision in Allianz SpA v

[11] CJEU, C-351/89 Overseas Union Insurance Ltd v New Hampshire Insurance Co [1991] ECR I-3317.

[12] CJEU, C-4/03 GAT v Luk [2006] ECR I-6509.

[13] See AV Dicey, JHC Morris and L Collins (n 8) para 12-049 who are in favour of such an exception based on the argument that a judgment given by a court first seised in breach of art 22 would be unenforceable in accordance with art 35(1) and consequently 'there is no sensible purpose in deferring to a court whose judgment will be a nullity in England'.