ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

A project that has taken this long to complete accumulates a lot of debts. I would like to thank, above all, my PhD adviser, Michael McCormick, Harvard University, who has given me insightful advice and unwavering support over the years. I am also grateful to the other readers of the original dissertation, Christopher Jones and Thomas Bisson, Harvard University, for their important feedback. Susan Stevens of Randolph College, Yizhar Hirschfeld (R.I.P.) of the Hebrew University, and the San Vincenzo team of the British School at Rome gave me the opportunity to try my hand at excavation and the interpretation of archaeological data. I owe special thanks to Susan Stevens for teaching me the difficulties of archaeological survey by assigning me the transect that went through the prickly pear cactus. Fellowships from Dumbarton Oaks and Harvard University provided the time and intellectual exchange to finish the original dissertation. The American Academy in Rome and my home institution, Loyola University of Chicago, gave me a year's leave and a semester of reduced teaching to revise the manuscript. Alan Zola and Thomas Greene, PhD students at Loyola University, helped check citations. Alan also spent many hours editing and reformatting the manuscript and helped me correct a number of errors, although those remaining are my own responsibility of course. Other individuals whose suggestions and expertise have assisted me greatly are my colleague at Loyola Barbara Rosenwein, Jane Bestor, Jean-Pierre Sodini, Philip Grierson (RIP), Ann Marie Yasin, Elizabeth Fentress, Archer Martin, Peter Brown, and four anonymous readers of the manuscript. The graduate students at Loyola University helped me clarify many of my ideas in seminars. My thanks to the many dedicated librarians at Widener Library, Dumbarton

Oaks, the American Academy in Rome, the University of Chicago, and Loyola University, who make this sort of research possible. The book is dedicated to my husband, David Bush, who has had to hear more about North African peasants than anybody should be expected to.
