

FRED FEDLER
JOHN R. BENDER
LUCINDA DAVENPORT
MICHAEL W. DRAGER

REPORTING FOR THE MEDIA

Seventh Edition

KWUEB7U
32478851G
39841JG9W8
340357F
345071W
T719W
609
U
W6

786T01
EHG

00.00.01
00.00.02
00.00.03
00.00.04
00.00.05
00.00.06
00.00.07
00.00.08
00.00.09
00.00.10
00.00.11
00.00.12
00.00.13
00.00.14
00.00.15
00.00.16
00.00.17
00.00.18
00.00.19
00.00.20
00.00.21

REPORTING FOR THE MEDIA

Seventh Edition

FRED FEDLER

University of Central Florida

JOHN R. BENDER

University of Nebraska–Lincoln

LUCINDA D. DAVENPORT

Michigan State University

MICHAEL W. DRAGER

Indiana University of Pennsylvania

New York Oxford
OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

Oxford University Press

Oxford New York
Auckland Bangkok Buenos Aires Cape Town
Chennai Dar es Salaam Delhi Hong Kong Istanbul Karachi
Kolkata Kuala Lumpur Madrid Melbourne Mexico City Mumbai Nairobi
São Paulo Shanghai Singapore Taipei Tokyo Toronto

and an associated company in Berlin

Copyright © 2001 by Oxford University Press, Inc.

Published by Oxford University Press, Inc.
198 Madison Avenue, New York, New York 10016
<http://www.oup-usa.org>

Oxford is a registered trademark of Oxford University Press

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system or transmitted, in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording, or otherwise, without the prior permission of Oxford University Press.

ISBN: 0-19-515515-7

Library of Congress Catalog Card Number: 00-102670

Printing number: 9 8 7 6 5 4 3

Printed in the United States of America on acid-free paper

Preface

Is journalism a social science or a humanity? Do journalists have more in common with sociologists, political scientists and economists or with poets, philosophers and painters? These questions may seem esoteric, but the answers describe what journalists do and suggest how they should be trained.

The subject matter of most news stories falls squarely within the domain of the social sciences: crime, the economy, government policies, international relations. Reporters must be familiar with those fields. Some reporters are experts in law, economics or diplomacy. Yet the practice of journalism has more to do with the humanities than with the social sciences. Like novelists and playwrights, reporters are storytellers. Like poets and painters, they seek compelling, emotionally powerful images. So what does it take to be a reporter?

Good reporters need two characteristics:

1. They must be engaged in the world around them.
2. They must be articulate.

Being engaged in the world means reporters have a high degree of curiosity about their beats and life in general, and they feel empathy for the people who are the subjects of their stories.

Curiosity helps reporters generate story ideas and develop the stories assigned to them. Good stories emerge when reporters ask why things work as they do, what's wrong, what's right and who makes a difference. The more sophisticated the questions reporters ask, the more sophisticated—and interesting—the stories they tell. Curiosity should lead reporters to ask about things others may not have considered newsworthy or interesting. The incurious reporter might have a parent who is facing a debilitating disease and see it only as a personal problem. The curious reporter in the same situation recognizes that many people may be living with the same problem and looking for support, information and encouragement. From that recognition emerges a great story idea. The incurious reporter may watch the city council award contract after contract to the same company and not wonder why that happens. The curious reporter will ask why the contractor is so successful, whether that success carries over to competition for private sector projects and what connections to the city council the contractor might have. From those questions emerges a prize-winning investigative project.

Reporters must be constantly curious, asking about the details of their beats. How do police work? What do they do at a crime scene? How do they handle interrogations? Reporters should ask such questions with no expectation the answers will lead to stories. No reporter can predict what tidbit of information may help unravel a great story. But even if the information yields no story, it might be a fact or insight that helps the reporter understand and explain events to readers and viewers.

Being engaged also means having empathy for the sources and subjects of news stories. People in the news often are involved in highly emotional situations. They may be victims of crime or the relatives of a victim; they may be people who have lost loved ones in a plane crash; they may be athletes who have just suffered a defeat; or they may be community residents worried about how a proposed development might affect their lives and their property. A story about a knife attack by a male employee on a female supervisor is not just an antiseptic crime story or an exercise in deductive logic. It is a story about anger, frustration, betrayal, terror and humiliation. A reporter who cannot empathize with the people involved cannot truly understand their experiences or tell their story.

The ability to empathize does not require reporters to abandon objectivity and impartiality. Empathy differs from sympathy. Sympathy requires one to have the same feelings as another or to achieve a mutual understanding with another. Empathy means projecting one's personality into that of another so as to understand the other person better. Reporters who have empathy for others can understand them without embracing or approving their emotions. Empathy not only is consistent with objectivity, it is probably indispensable for producing a truly objective and thorough story. If reporters cannot understand the emotional state of the people they write about or assess the emotional impact events have on their sources, they will fail to report the full story.

Curiosity and empathy enable reporters to get the who, what, when, where, why and how of a story. Putting those elements into a coherent, interesting and readable story requires that reporters be articulate.

Being articulate combines at least two skills. One is the ability to use words effectively, to select the appropriate words and use them correctly, to arrange them in sentences that are grammatical and properly punctuated. The other skill is the ability to organize the elements of the story—the facts, the quotations and the anecdotes—in a manner that is captivating, informative and dramatic.

Reporters who understand grammar and diction can construct sentences that are clear and precise. The skillful writer knows that the following sentences mean very different things:

She only kissed him on the lips.

She kissed him only on the lips.

The skillful writer would also know that one of these sentences accuses the subject of a crime:

Wanda sent her husband Bob to the store.

Wanda sent her husband, Bob, to the store.

The first sentence uses “Bob” as an essential modifier of “husband,” meaning that Wanda has more than one husband and the one she sent to the store is Bob. The sentence implies Wanda has committed the crime of bigamy. The second sentence, because it uses commas before and after “Bob,” makes it clear that Wanda has only one husband, and his name is Bob.

The ability to construct clear, correct sentences is fundamental. But a news story may contain nothing but clear, correct sentences and still be impossible to read because the writer has failed to organize the material. Readers crave organization; if they don't find it, they may stop reading. A story that jumps from one topic to another and back to the first without any sense of direction will confuse readers and drive them elsewhere for information. Reporters need to know how to organize information in a way that makes its significance and drama clear. Usually for news stories, this means placing the newest, most newsworthy information early in the story. But sometimes, writers want to hold some particularly dramatic or poignant fact for the end of the story.

All of the skills one needs to become a great reporter—curiosity, empathy, a knowledge of grammar and the ability to organize stories—are skills a person can learn. Some people may learn them more easily than others, or some may develop one set of skills more than the others. But anybody who can handle college-level course work can cultivate the skills a professional reporter needs. This seventh edition of “Reporting for the Media” offers many features—some new to this edition—to help students master the skills of news reporting.

Features of Interest

As with the previous editions of this textbook, the seventh edition contains several changes. One is that Fred Fedler is stepping aside as the lead author. Fedler created this textbook nearly 25 years ago and nurtured it through its first five editions by himself. For the sixth edition, he added three co-authors and assumed the role of lead author and editor. One of those co-authors,

John Bender, has taken over most of those duties for this edition. Fedler remains involved in making decisions about the content and format of the book, and his co-authors are committed to keeping the book one that longtime users will be comfortable with.

Although the seventh edition contains hundreds of changes, some major ones are worth noting:

- The Selecting and Reporting the News chapter now includes an extensive section on prewriting. This section tells how to select a central point for a news story and to organize the information so as to stick to and develop the central point. The idea of having a central point is one that the authors return to frequently throughout the textbook.
- The first chapter, The Basics, Format and AP Style, has been rewritten to include material from the introduction to the previous editions.
- A chapter on spelling and grammar has been added. This chapter introduces basic principles of sentence structure and grammar, which later chapters build on.
- A chapter on gathering information from the Internet has been added. The chapter covers some basics of how the Internet works, how to search the World Wide Web efficiently for information and the problems of gathering information from the Internet.
- The chapter on advanced reporting has been revised and expanded and now includes introductory concepts on computer-assisted reporting.
- The Interviews chapter has been completely rewritten and expanded.
- Almost every chapter includes new exercises, most based on real incidents and real news stories.
- Joe Hight, managing editor of The Daily Oklahoman, has contributed 12 columns on writing and reporting. These columns appear in various chapters throughout the book and replace many of the columns from previous editions.
- New photographs and illustrations have been added, some to chapters that had no illustrations in the past.
- The discussion of public relations is concentrated in one chapter in this edition, rather than spread over two chapters as in the past.

Other Features of Interest to Faculty Members

Answer Keys

Some students want more practice after they read the chapters and work on their exercises. They can complete the extra exercises marked “Answer Key Provided,” then correct their own work. The answers to those exercises appear in Appendix D.

Appendices

“Reporting for the Media” provides five appendices: (A) a city directory, (B) a summary of The Associated Press Stylebook and Libel Manual, (C) rules for forming possessives, (D) answer keys for some exercises and (E) a discussion of common writing problems.

Checklists and Other End-of-Chapter Materials

A variety of supplemental teaching materials appears at the end of each chapter. The materials include expanded checklists that review and reinforce the chapter’s primary instructions. Other materials vary from chapter to chapter but typically include (1) lists of readings, (2) discussion questions, (3) suggested projects and (4) sidebars or columns.

Flexibility

“Reporting for the Media” is flexible. Teachers can assign its chapters in almost any order. Moreover, the book provides enough exercises that faculty members can assign their favorites, then assign extra exercises for students who need more help. Some teachers use the book for two semesters: for basic and advanced reporting classes. There are enough exercises for both terms.

Faculty members who prefer the book’s traditional emphasis on the print media can assign the chapters on public relations and writing for the broadcast media as optional readings.

Hundreds of Examples

“Reporting for the Media” contains hundreds of examples, some written by students and some by professionals. While introducing a new topic or discussing an error, this book typically shows students examples. For errors, the book also shows students how to avoid or correct them.

Some examples have been written by prize-winning professionals, and students can use their stories as models. For instance, examples from the Norfolk (Va.) Virginian-Pilot and The St. Petersburg (Fla.) Times illustrate the focus-story and the hourglass-story formats. And Jim Nicholson of the Philadelphia Daily News, considered by many journalists to be the nation’s best obituary writer, is quoted extensively in Chapter 11 (Writing Obituaries).

Realistic and Often Genuine Exercises

This book contains a multitude of exercises, and teachers can select the ones most appropriate for their students. Many are real. Chapter 12 (Speeches and Meetings) includes President Bill Clinton’s address at a memorial service for victims of the Oklahoma City bombing and President George Bush’s address to the nation at the start of the Persian Gulf War. Chapter 15 includes an exercise based on 911 tapes involved in the investigation of serial killer Jeffrey L. Dahmer. Exercises in other chapters, although fictionalized, are drawn from real events.

To add to the realism, many of the exercises contain ethical problems: profanities, sexist comments, the names of rape victims, bloody details and other material that many editors would be reluctant to publish. Students completing those exercises will have to deal with the problems, and their decisions are likely to provoke class discussion.

Instructor’s Manual

The authors provide a detailed Instructor’s Manual: 135 pages of ideas, recommendations, answers and quizzes. The manual’s introductory sections discuss accuracy, grades, suggested policies and assignments. Those sections are followed by sample course outlines and lists of the exercises that contain ethical dilemmas and sexist remarks. Other lists tell you which exercises mention your city, state or school and can be localized. Later sections provide answers for many of the exercises. The manual also has tests covering style, vocabulary, attribution and spelling, as well as true/false questions for most chapters. (If you would like your city or school mentioned in an exercise in the next edition, contact any of the authors.)

Computer Software

Teachers who have access to Macintosh computers can use this book with “Media Writer: Computerized Lessons in News Reporting,” also written by Fred Fedler and Lucinda D. Davenport. The software, sold separately, provides 32 interactive exercises for students in reporting classes. The first exercise emphasizes the fundamentals of news writing: spelling, style, accuracy and objectivity. Other exercises teach students how to write more clearly and concisely, with practice in writing leads and complete news stories. All exercises are designed to test student judgment and ethics.

Practical Approach

Like previous editions, the seventh is concrete, not abstract or theoretical. Its tone is practical and realistic. Its language is readable: clear, concise, simple and direct. Because of the book's realism, students will encounter the types of problems and assignments they are likely to find when they graduate and take entry-level jobs with the media.

Pro Challenge

Several exercises in the chapters about leads and the body of news stories are subtitled "Pro Challenge." Professionals have completed the exercises so students assigned the same exercises can compare their work to that of the professionals.

A Single Volume

By combining everything students need in a single volume, "Reporting for the Media" provides a convenient package at a reasonable price. Like earlier editions, the seventh edition includes both the instructions and examples that students need to learn to write more effectively. It also includes a multitude of exercises and a summary of The Associated Press Stylebook. Thus students do not have to buy separate workbooks and stylebooks along with the text.

A Note of Thanks

Journalists are wonderful people: enthusiastic, interesting and helpful. While working on this book, we wrote to dozens of them. Reporters, photographers and editors from Portland, to Philadelphia, from Miami to New York, answered our letters and provided advice and samples of their work.

We would especially like to thank the many professionals who gave us permission to quote their work: Roy Peter Clark of the Poynter Institute for Media Studies; Don Fry of the Poynter Institute for Media Studies; Ken Fuson, a reporter for the Des Moines Register; Jack Hart, managing editor of The Oregonian in Portland; Joe Hight, managing editor of The Daily Oklahoman; Robin Hinch, an obituary writer for the Orange County (Calif.) Register; Kelly Luvison, publisher of The Evening News of Hornell, N.Y.; Henry McNulty, a former associate editor of the Hartford (Conn.) Courant; Jim Nicholson, an obituary writer for the Philadelphia Daily News; Clarence Page, a columnist for The Chicago Tribune; and Kathleen Parker, a columnist for Tribune Media Services. We would also like to thank two former students who allowed us to use some of their work: Shannon Hefflefinger and Chris Heine.

Some teaching colleagues also gave us permission to quote their work: Bryan Denham, an assistant professor at Clemson University; Eugene Goodwin, a retired journalist, professor and author of “Groping for Ethics in Journalism”; Dean Kazoleas, a professor at Illinois State University and public relations professional; M. Timothy O’Keefe, a professor at the University of Central Florida and a free-lance writer; and Jim Underwood, a professor at Ohio Wesleyan University.

Numerous publications and news services gave us permission to quote their stories or republish their photographs: The Associated Press, The Ann Arbor (Mich.) News, The Boston Globe, The Chicago Tribune, The Daily Nebraskan, The Dallas Morning News, The Detroit News, the Greensboro (N.C.) News & Record, The Houston Chronicle, The Los Angeles Times, Lincoln (Neb.) Journal Star, The New York Times, The Milwaukee Journal Sentinel, The Orlando (Fla.) Sentinel, The San Mateo (Calif.) County Times, The Seward County (Neb.) Independent, The San Francisco Chronicle, The St. Louis Post-Dispatch, The St. Petersburg (Fla.) Times, USA Today, the Norfolk (Va.) Virginian-Pilot and The Washington Post.

The following organizations also allowed us to quote their material: The Society of Professional Journalists and the National Center for Victims of Crime.

Several professionals, all former students, completed the exercises titled “Pro Challenge”: Eric Dentel, Dana Eagles, Geoffrey M. Giordana, Mike Griffin, Lisa Lochridge and Loraine O’Connell.

We could also like to thank another colleague, Pat Mills of the department of journalism at Ball State University, for her help during a previous edition in revising and improving the chapter on feature stories.

For their insightful comments and useful suggestions during the development process, thanks go to Ginger Carter, Georgia College; Beth Haller, Towson University; James Highland, Western Kentucky University; Rose Anne Robertson, American University; Karon Speckman, Truman State University; and James Whitfield, Northeast Louisiana State University.

We would also like to thank the staff at Harcourt College Publishers: Stephen Dalphin, acquisitions editor; Cathlynn Richard Dodson, developmental editor; Rebekah Mercer, project editor; David Day, art director; Cindy Young, production manager; and Adrienne Krysiuk, market strategist; also, freelancers Leon Unruh and Mike Nichols for their expertise in copyediting and proofreading.

The Authors

Fred Fedler received his bachelor's degree from the University of Wisconsin in Madison, then worked as a newspaper reporter in Dubuque and Davenport, Iowa, and as a copy editor in Sacramento, Calif. He received his master's degree from the University of Kentucky and doctorate from the University of Minnesota. Since 1971, Fedler has taught at the University of Central Florida in Orlando and for 16 years headed the School of Communication's Journalism Division. He regularly conducts research in the field of journalism but also continues to free-lance for popular publications. Fedler's other books include "Introduction to the Mass Media," "Media Hoaxes" and "Lessons from the Past: Journalists' Lives and Work—1850–1950." In addition, Fedler has served on numerous committees concerned with journalism education.

John R. Bender is an associate professor in the news-editorial department of the College of Journalism at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln. Bender worked for six years for the Pittsburg (Kan.) Morning Sun, starting as a reporter covering local government and politics. He became the paper's assignment editor, news editor and then managing editor. During his term as managing editor, the Morning Sun won awards for farm coverage, photography and editorial writing. Bender has taught at the college or university level for 15 years. He was a journalism instructor at Culver-Stockton College in Canton, Mo., for five years, and he joined the faculty of the University of Nebraska in 1990. His teaching and research areas include news reporting and writing, communications law, media history and controls of information. He is also executive director of the Nebraska High School Press Association. As an undergraduate, Bender majored in sociology at Westminster College in Fulton, Mo. He holds a master's degree in journalism from the University of Kansas and a doctorate in journalism from the University of Missouri at Columbia.

Lucinda D. Davenport is a professor in the School of Journalism at Michigan State University and also serves as the school's assistant director and head of the graduate program. In addition, Davenport is the president of the board of directors for The State News, the largest student newspaper in the country. Davenport has worked and taught in many journalism areas, including newspaper and broadcast reporting, computer-assisted reporting and public relations. At Michigan State University, she teaches, conducts professional workshops and publishes research, mostly in the areas of media ethics and computer-assisted reporting. She has written two books and developed interactive journalism education software for newswriting and reporting classes. As an undergraduate at Baylor University, Davenport double majored in journalism and radio/TV/film. She received a master's degree in journalism from the University of Iowa and a doctorate in mass media from Ohio University, where her dissertation was one of the first in the world about online news and information.

Michael W. Drager is an assistant professor in the Department of Journalism at Indiana University of Pennsylvania. He graduated with a bachelor's degree in art from Millersville University in Pennsylvania. While working as a newspaper reporter, Drager earned a master's degree in communication at Shippensburg University, also in Pennsylvania. Drager received his doctorate from Michigan State University. As a journalist, Drager has worked as a reporter, copy editor, editorial writer, columnist and photographer. He has also worked in public relations as a writer and publications designer. As an educator, Drager has 14 years of experience in both public and higher education. He has taught courses in news reporting, news editing and design, public relations writing, photojournalism, magazine design and media ethics. His research explores the relationship between mass media and public policy. In addition, he conducts workshops and seminars on the relationship between journalism and public institutions.

Many students and teachers have written us over the years telling us what they like and dislike about this book and suggesting new features. We have adopted many of those ideas, and we would like to hear from you. If you have a comment or suggestion, please write any of us:

Fred Fedler

School of Communication
University of Central Florida
Orlando, Fla. 32816-1344
ffedler@pegasus.cc.ucf.edu

Lucinda D. Davenport

School of Journalism
Michigan State University
East Lansing, Mich. 48824-1212
ludavenp@msu.edu

John R. Bender

College of Journalism
University of Nebraska
Lincoln, Neb. 68588-0132
jbender@unl.edu

Michael W. Drager

Department of Journalism
Indiana University of Pennsylvania
Indiana, Pa. 15701
mwdrager@in.epix.net

Contents

Preface v

Note of Thanks x

The Authors xi

Chapter 1 The Basics: Format and AP Style 1

News Story Format	1
Copy-editing Symbols	3
The Associated Press Stylebook and Libel Manual	7
Accuracy of Names and Facts	8
Checklist for Copy Preparation	8
The Writing Coach—The Lucky 13 Ways to Become a Good Writer	10
Suggested Readings	10
Exercises	11

Chapter 2 Grammar and Spelling 22

Basic Sentence Structure	22
Active and Passive Voice	23
Agreement	24
Ambiguous Pronouns	25
Plurals and Possessives	25
“That” and “Which”	26
“Who” and “Whom”	27
Misplaced Modifiers	27
Dangling Modifiers	28
Personification	28
Parallel Form	29
Articles	29
Spelling	30
Grammar Checklist	30
Suggested Readings	30
Exercises	32

Chapter 3 Newswriting Style 39

Prewriting	39
Simplify Words, Sentences and Paragraphs	41
Remain Objective	46
The Writing Coach—Find the Clear Path to Writing Glory	50
Checklist for Newswriting Style	54
Suggested Readings	54
Exercises	56

Chapter 4 The Language of News 70

The Effectiveness of Words	70
Be Precise	71
Use Strong Verbs	73
Avoiding Problems in Your Writing	74
Words to Avoid	76
Other Problems to Avoid	81
Keep Related Words Together	85
Checklist for the Language of News	86
The Writing Coach—Become a Power Lifter When Picking Verbs	87
Suggested Readings	88
Exercises	89

Chapter 5 Selecting and Reporting the News 107

The Characteristics of News	107
Types of News	112
Public/Civic Journalism	114
Applying the Principles of News Selection	116
The Concept of Objectivity	116
Details Newspapers Are Reluctant to Publish	117
The Importance of Accuracy	120
Suggested Readings	123
The Writing Coach—Acronyms Lift Your Writing	124
Exercises	127

Chapter 6 Basic News Leads 131

The Summary News Lead	131
Sentence Structure in Leads	133
Guidelines for Writing Effective Leads	134
Avoiding Some Common Errors	139
Apply the Guidelines to Other Kinds of Leads	143
Checklist for Writing Leads	143
The Writing Coach—Oh Where, Oh Where Does the Time Element Go?	144
Suggested Readings	145
Exercises	146

Chapter 7 Alternative Leads 161

Criticisms	162
“Buried” or “Delayed” Leads	162
Multiparagraph Leads	163
Using Quotations	164
Using Questions	164
Suspenseful Leads	165
Descriptive Leads	166
Shocking Leads—With a Twist	166
Ironic Leads	167
Direct-Address Leads	167
Unusual Words Used in Unusual Ways	168
Other Unusual Leads	168
The Writing Coach—Too Many Words Can Muddle Writing	169
Exercises	171

Chapter 8	The Body of a News Story	178
	The Inverted Pyramid Style	178
	The Hourglass Style	184
	The Focus Style	186
	The Narrative Style	189
	Using Transitions	192
	Explain the Unfamiliar	197
	The Importance of Examples	198
	The Use of Description	199
	The Use of Humor	200
	The Writing Coach—How to Find the Endings to Stories	201
	The Need to Be Fair	202
	The Final Step: Edit Your Story	202
	Checklist for Writing News Stories	203
	Suggested Readings	203
	Exercises	204
 Chapter 9	 Quotations and Attribution	 217
	Quotations	217
	Blending Quotations and Narrative	221
	Attribution	224
	Guidelines for Capitalizing and Punctuating Quotations	232
	Checklists for Quotations and Attribution	234
	Exercises	236
 Chapter 10	 Interviews	 245
	Why Am I Interviewing?	245
	Whom Should I Interview?	246
	When Should I Conduct My Interviews?	247
	Where Should I Conduct the Interview?	248
	What Questions Should I Ask?	249
	How Should I Conduct Interviews?	250
	Writing the Interview Story	252
	The Writing Coach—Figure It: Poetry Can Be in Newspaper Stories	253
	Suggested Readings	254
	Exercises	255
 Chapter 11	 Writing Obituaries	 267
	Obituaries Are Not News Stories	268
	Obituaries Are Not Funeral Notices	268
	Sources of Information for Obituaries	268
	The Content of an Obituary	269
	Additional Guidelines for Writing Obituaries	272
	Obituaries for Celebrities	273
	Reporting the Good—And the Bad	274
	Some Final Suggestions	275
	Checklists for Writing Obituaries	276
	Suggested Readings	277
	Exercises	278

Chapter 12 Speeches and Meetings 287

Advance Stories	287
Covering the Speech or Meeting	288
Follow Stories	289
Remember Your Readers	293
Adding Color	294
Checklists for Reporting Speeches and Meetings	295
The Writing Coach—Go Beyond the Stick	296
Exercises	297

Chapter 13 Specialized Types of Stories 313

Brights	313
Follow-ups	315
Roundups	316
Sidebars	317
Checklists for Writing Specialized Stories	317
Exercises	319

Chapter 14 Feature Stories 335

Selecting a Topic	335
Types of Feature Stories	336
Types of Feature Leads	343
The Body of a Feature Story	344
The Ending of a Feature Story	346
Suggested Readings	347
The Writing Coach—Reports, Stories Vital to Newspapers	348
Exercises	350

Chapter 15 Public Affairs Reporting 358

Crime and Accidents	359
Local Government	364
Courts	371
A Note About This Chapter's Exercises	376
Checklists for Public Affairs Reporting	377
Suggested Readings	377
The Writing Coach—The "Knows" Have It for Police and Court Reporters	378
Exercises	380

Chapter 16 Understanding and Using the Internet 407

A Brief History	407
Journalists and the Internet	407
E-Mail	408
Internet Addresses or URLs (Universal Resource Locators)	409
Search Engines and Subject Directories	411
Mailing Lists and Newsgroups	414
Ethical Considerations	416
Suggested Readings	416
Exercises	417

Chapter 17 Advanced Reporting 419

Using Statistics	419
Conducting Informal Polls	420
Using Computers to Get Answers	423
Checklist for Using Statistics	424
Checklist for Conducting Informal Polls	424
Suggested Readings	424
Exercises	426

Chapter 18 Writing for Broadcast 447

Writing for Your Listener	447
Writing for Your Announcer	449
Types of Leads for Broadcast Stories	450
The Body of a Broadcast News Story	453
Updating Broadcast News Stories	453
Guidelines for Copy Preparation	454
Editing Copy	456
Putting Together a Newscast	456
Sources for Broadcast News	457
The Newsroom Environment	459
Checklists for Broadcast Writing	459
Suggested Readings	460
Exercises	461

Chapter 19 The News Media and PR Practitioners 471

What Is Public Relations?	471
Public Relations Agencies	471
Corporate and Nonprofit Public Relations	472
Becoming a Public Relations Practitioner	473
Working with News Media	473
Elements of a News Release	474
Types of News Releases	477
The Journalist's Perspective: Working with Press Releases	480
The No. 1 Problem: Lack of Newsworthiness	481
The No. 2 Problem: Lack of Objectivity	483
Other Problems with News Releases	485
Some Final Guidelines	487
Checklist for PR Practitioners	487
Checklist for Handling News Releases	488
Suggested Readings	488
Exercises	491

Chapter 20 Communications Law 505

Libel	505
Privacy	515
Newsgathering	520
Checklists	525
Suggested Readings	527
Exercises	530

Chapter 21 Ethics 537

Media Credibility	537
Ethical Decision Making	538
Ethics Issues	540
Checklist for Improving Media Credibility	562
Suggested Readings	563
Exercises	564

Chapter 22 Careers 571

A Journalist's Attributes	571
Be the Applicant Who Gets Hired	572
Job Satisfaction	575
The Industry Needs More Women and Minorities	578
Free-lance Writing	578
Checklist for Finding the Right Journalism Job	578
Suggested Readings	579

Appendix A City Directory 580

Appendix B The Associated Press Stylebook 595

Appendix C Rules for Forming Possessives 604

Appendix D Answer Keys 606

Appendix E Common Writing Errors 614

Credits 617

Index 619
