

JOHN TRIMBUR

NOW AVAILABLE WITH DAEDALUS ONLINE

BRIEF EDITION

THE CALL TO WRITE

THE CALL TO WRITE

BRIEF EDITION

John Trimbur
Worcester Polytechnic Institute

LONGMAN

An imprint of Addison Wesley Longman, Inc.

New York • Reading, Massachusetts • Menlo Park, California • Harlow, England
Don Mills, Ontario • Sydney • Mexico City • Madrid • Amsterdam

Publishing Partner: Anne Elizabeth Smith
Development Editor: Leslie Taggart
Senior Marketing Manager: Ann Stypuloski
Supplements Editor: Donna Campion
Project Coordination and Text Design: Electronic Publishing Services Inc., NYC
Cover Designer/Manager: Nancy Danahy
Cover Illustration/Photo: Don Beatty Photo © 1981
Full Service Production Manager: Valerie Zaborski
Photo Researcher: Photosearch, Inc.
Senior Print Buyer: Hugh Crawford
Electronic Page Makeup: Electronic Publishing Services Inc., NYC
Printer and Binder: Von Hoffman Press, Inc.
Cover Printer: Von Hoffman Press, Inc.

For permission to use copyrighted material, grateful acknowledgment is made to the copyright holders listed throughout and at the end of this book, which are hereby made part of this copyright page.

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Trimbur, John.

The call to write / John Trimbur. --Brief ed.

p. cm.

Includes bibliographical references and index.

ISBN 0-321-04606-4 (pbk.)

1. English language--Rhetoric. 2. Report writing--Problems, exercises, etc. 3. College readers. I. Title.

PE1408.T6942 1998

98-45528

808'.042--dc21

CIP

Copyright © 1999 by Addison-Wesley Educational Publishers Inc.

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted, in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording, or otherwise, without the prior written permission of the publisher. Printed in the United States.

Please visit our website at <http://longman.awl.com>

ISBN 0-321-04606-4 (paperbound)

2345678910—VII—010099

The Call to Write

Brief Edition

Preface

The Call to Write offers students a broad introduction to writing, so that they can learn to write with flexibility and influence in a variety of settings. One of these settings, certainly, is school. Often a person's earliest formative experience with writing takes place in school, and for this reason people often think of writing as an academic subject to be studied, learned, and tested. Many of the assignments in the following chapters are typical of the writing college students are called on to do. A central aim of this book, after all, is to help students become effective writers in their college coursework.

At the same time, The Call to Write takes as its starting point the view that writing is much more than a school subject. Writing is an activity individuals and groups rely on to communicate with others, organize their social lives, get work done, entertain themselves, and voice their needs and aspirations. People write lists to remember what they need to do, letters to stay in touch with friends and relatives, memos and reports to communicate with coworkers on the job, newsletters to publicize what a club or organization is doing, brochures to inform readers, and flyers and petitions to persuade others to support causes. This textbook presents a wide range of situations that call on people to write—in everyday life, in school, in the workplace, and in the public sphere.

Just as the situations that give rise to writing differ, so do the tools available to writers. Technologies of writing range from the hand-written note to the typed or word-processed essay to the new means of composing e-mail and hypertext in cyberspace. Writing no longer refers simply to print literacy and the words on the page. It also involves electronic communication media and the integration of text, graphics, sound, and video. While The Call to Write cannot teach many of the skills needed to operate new writing technologies, it takes into account how writers use these new means of communication and how many forms of writing combine words and graphics to present a message.

One of the main premises of this book is that writing should belong to everyone in the various roles people play—as private individuals, as students, as workers, and as participants in public life. The Call to Write offers students an education in writing, with the goal of enabling them to see how writing connects individuals to others and to the cultural practices and social institutions that shape their lives. In this regard, the call to write—the felt sense that something needs to be said—presents writing not just as a skill to master but as a means to participate meaningfully in the common life and to influence its direction.

Distinctive Features of The Call to Write

The distinctive features of The Call to Write follow from its commitment to help students understand what calls on people to write and the means of written communication available to them:

A WIDE ARRAY OF WRITING

The Call to Write includes examples of public writing—ranging from speeches, news stories, government reports, and op-ed pieces, to comic strips, graffiti, listservs, ads, flyers, and newsletters—as well as academic articles, literary essays, and student work.

GUIDED WRITING ASSIGNMENTS

The chapters in Part Two, “Writing Projects,” include individual and collaborative writing assignments based on eight familiar genres—letters, memoirs, public documents, profiles, reports, commentary, proposals, and reviews. Each chapter includes extensive treatment of invention, planning, peer commentary, and revision, as well as student commentaries on their own writing (Writers’ Workshop) and an opportunity for students to reflect on the process of writing (Writing Inventory). Discussions of Paragraph Development, Beginnings and Endings, and Connections and Coherence pertinent to each genre are integrated into the assignments.

AN EMPHASIS ON COLLABORATIVE LEARNING

The Call to Write includes many opportunities for group discussions, as well as a collaborative project (Working Together) and guidelines for peer commentaries in each of the chapters in Part Two. Part Three, “Writers at Work,” demonstrates how writers work together on both individual and collaborative writing projects.

INTEGRATION OF READING AND WRITING

Chapter 2, “Reading and Writing: The Critical Connection,” offers an overview of reading strategies and explains how writers integrate reading into their work. Throughout the book, questions for Critical Inquiry ask students to read closely and carefully, to understand their responses as readers and the decisions writers have made.

A FOCUS ON VISUAL DESIGN

Many of the writing samples in The Call to Write include both text and graphics, and each chapter in Part Two includes a section on Designing Documents that asks students to evaluate critically the visual design of various documents. Chapter 18, “Document Design,” presents basic principles of manuscript preparation, page layout, and how text and visual design features work together.

ON-LINE ACTIVITIES

Throughout The Call to Write there are many samples of online writing—e-mail messages, listservs, newsgroups, and Web sites—as well as activities that invite students to explore and evaluate new electronic communication media. Chapter 14, “The Writer’s Tools: Word Processing and Electronic Communication,” offers a convenient overview of new writing technologies.

AN EMPHASIS ON ETHICS AND THE WRITER’S RESPONSIBILITIES

The Call to Write presents boxes on the ethics of writing that raise issues concerning writers’ responsibilities toward their readers and their subjects. Chapter 3, “Argument: Persuasion and Responsibility,” includes coverage of how writers can deal responsibly with disagreements and negotiate their differences with others.

Using The Call to Write

The Call to Write is meant to be used flexibly, to fit the goals and local needs of teachers, courses, and writing programs.

While there is no single path to follow in teaching The Call to Write, for most teachers the core of the book will be the Writing Projects in Part Two—the guided writing assignments based on eight common genres. Teachers can choose from among these genres and assign them in the order that best suits their course design.

A rich array of material appears in the other sections of The Call to Write, and teachers may draw on the various chapters to introduce key concepts and deepen students’ understanding of reading and writing. It can be helpful to think of the organization of the book as a modular one that enables teachers to combine chapters in ways that emphasize their own interests and priorities.

The following overview of the organization of The Call to Write describes the six main parts of the book and explains how these parts might be used.

- Part One, “Writing and Reading,” introduces students to the notion of the call to write, offers strategies for critical reading, and presents methods for identifying disputed issues, planning responsible arguments, and negotiating differences with others.

Chapter 1, “The Call to Write in Context,” is a good starting point in any writing course because it explains what calls on people to write in a variety of settings, enhancing students’ understanding of how writing is interwoven into so many aspects of contemporary life and how writing takes on force and consequence in the world.

The following two chapters—Chapter 2, “Reading and Writing: The Critical Connection,” and Chapter 3, “Argument: Persuasion and Responsibility”—emphasize the belief held throughout this book that to write responsibly means to write in a way that engages with others and takes their views seriously. Chapter 2 focuses on how to read closely and carefully, analyzing and evaluating what others have said. Chapter 3 focuses on understanding the controversies that divide people and how to plan arguments that can clarify points of contention and negotiate differences. These two chapters can serve to introduce central themes at the beginning of a course, or they can be integrated throughout the course as issues of critical reading and argument come up.

- Part Two, “Writing Projects,” presents eight familiar genres of writing with examples, questions for Critical Inquiry, and individual and collaborative writing assignments. Assignments call on students to write for a number of different audiences and in a number of different settings, ranging from everyday life to the academic world to public forums. Moreover, the aims of the writing assignments vary, from expressive to informative to persuasive. Each assignment contains extensive guidelines for invention, planning, peer commentary, and revision. These chapters form the core of The Call to Write.
- Part Three, “Writers at Work,” looks at how writers can work together on individual and collaborative writing projects and at the new writing technologies currently available.

Chapter 12, “Working Together: Individual Writing Projects,” includes a case study of an individual writing project from invention to editing, with examples of peer response and commentary at each step. Chapter 13, “Working Together: Collaborative Writing Projects,” provides suggestions about how to work on group projects and includes a number of possible collaborative writing projects. These chapters can be integrated into a course at a number of points—to initiate discussion of how writers manage individual writing projects, to enhance students’ understanding of peer commentary, and to prepare students for collaborative writing projects.

Chapter 14, “The Writer’s Tools: Word Processing and Electronic Communication,” is especially appropriate for courses that emphasize on-line writing but can also be assigned usefully in any writing course.

- Part Four, “Doing Research,” explores what calls on people to do research, how they formulate meaningful questions, and the sources they typically use. Chapter 15, “Research Projects: Using Print and Electronic Sources,” provides an overview of the research process and introduces students to library and on-line research. Chapter 16, “Field Research,” includes information about research projects that use observation, interviews, and questionnaires.
- Part Five, “Presenting Your Work,” looks at how writers communicate the results of their work to readers.

Chapter 17, “Research Papers: Using MLA, APA, and COS Styles,” includes extensive coverage of how researchers integrate sources into their own writing and of the conventions of citation and documentation. This chapter also provides sample student research papers in MLA and APA styles.

Chapter 18, “Document Design,” contains basic information on manuscript preparation and the design of such documents as letters, memos, resumés, flyers, newsletters, brochures, and Web pages. This chapter will be of special interest to teachers who want to explore more fully the focus on visual design that appears throughout the book and to students whose writing projects call for attention to layout and the integration of text and graphics.

Chapter 19, “Essay Exams,” provides basic advice about how to prepare for, plan, and write essay exams successfully.

Chapter 20, “Writing Portfolios,” provides guidelines about how to design a writing portfolio and examples of student work. This chapter is available for teachers who use a portfolio system of evaluation.

- Part Six, “Guide to Editing,” offers instruction in composing and editing sentences and serves as a basic reference on matters of grammar, style, and usage. It includes instruction on ten common problems that second-language writers may have.

Additional Resources for The Call to Write

The Instructor’s Manual, by Rebecca Moore Howard, Amy Rupiper, Kurt Schick, Ryan Stark, and Elizabeth Woodworth, all of Texas Christian University, provides background on the genre approach of The Call to Write and practical teaching approaches to public writing, the ethics of writing, literacy narratives, portfolios, and collaboration. Sample syllabi are included.

The Call to Write Web Site, <http://longman.awl.com/trimbur>, by Brooke Hessler of Texas Christian University and Lucia Trimbur of University of London, features seven to ten activities for each chapter, with annotated links to numerous other sites that offer additional resources. “Calls to Write in the News,” updated monthly, analyzes how a particular “headline event” in the news sparks written responses, and it provides a writing activity and annotated links for further inquiry.

Visual Communication: A Writer’s Guide, by Susan Hilligoss of Clemson University, examines the rhetoric and principles of visual design, with an emphasis throughout on audience and genre. Practical guidelines for incorporating graphics and visuals are featured along with sample planning worksheets and design samples and exercises.

Analyzing Literature: A Guide for Students, by Sharon James McGee of Kansas State University, Salina, provides advice and sample student papers to help students interpret and discuss works from a variety of literary genres.

The Longman “English Pages” Web Site, <http://longman.awl.com/englishpages>, provides continuously updated resources for reading, writing, and research practice: simulated search activities for finding and evaluating information from the World Wide Web; “The Faces of Composition,” essays from everyday people who discuss how studying composition has benefited their civic and work activities; and annotated links to a variety of library and scholarly sites on writing and research topics.

Acknowledgments

Preparing The Call to Write has made me acutely aware of the intellectual, professional, and personal debts I have accumulated over the years teaching writing, training writing teachers and peer tutors, and administering writing programs and writing centers. I want to acknowledge the contributions so many rhetoricians and composition specialists have made to my thinking about the study and teaching of writing, and I hope they will recognize—and perhaps approve of—the way their work has influenced the design of this book.

The unifying theme of the “call to write,” as many will note immediately, comes from Lloyd Bitzer’s notion of “exigence” and the “rhetorical situation.” My treatment of argument and persuasion is informed by Aristotle’s appeals (by way of Wayne Booth’s sense of “rhetorical stance”) and stasis theory (as articulated recently in Dick Fulkerson’s Teaching Argument in Writing), and my understanding of reasoning in argument is altogether indebted to Stephen Toulmin (though the terminology I use differs somewhat). The influence of Carolyn Miller’s seminal work on genre as “social action” should be apparent at every turn.

I learned to teach writing from two great mentors, Ken Bruffee and Peter Elbow, and their mark is everywhere in the book. My interest in visual design grows in part out of an ongoing collaboration with Diana George. Lester Faigley got me to pay attention to electronic communication and cyberspace. Bob Schwegler listened and offered key advice at many points.

I am happy to feature so much writing from students I have taught at Worcester Polytechnic Institute, where I developed and taught the bulk of the material that now appears in The Call to Write. Some of the student writing, I should note, has been edited for this book.

Leslie Taggart was the development editor for The Call to Write, and Anne Smith provided the in-house editorial support at Longman. I want to acknowledge their hard work, careful attention, good senses of humor, and loyalty to this project as it stretched over five years. Libby Miles worked on the assignment sequences in Part Two and developed the scheme of integrating Paragraph Development, Beginnings and Endings, and Connections and Coherence into each of the genre chapters. Janice Walker provided an early draft of the chapters on research. I appreciate their work.

To the many reviewers who provided valuable feedback at many points, my thanks:

Jim Addison, Western Carolina University
Virginia Anderson, Indiana University Southeast
Chris Anson, University of Minnesota
Janet Atwill, University of Tennessee
Margaret Batschelet, University of Texas, San Antonio
Linda Bensel-Meyers, University of Tennessee
David Blakesley, Southern Illinois University
Patrick Bruch, Wayne State University
Vicki Byard, Northeastern Illinois University
Rich Caccavale, University of Denver
Vincent Casaregola, St. Louis University
Virginia Chappell, Marquette University
John Clark, Bowling Green State University
Avon Crismore, Indiana University/Purdue University
Meaghan Cronin, St. Anselm College
Helen Dale, University of Wisconsin
Beth Daniell, Clemson University
Tom Fox, California State University, Chico
Christy Friend, University of Texas, Austin
Ed Fryzel, Henry Ford Community College
Greg Glau, Arizona State University
Paula Guetschow, University of Alaska
Kay Heath, Louisiana State University
Rebecca Moore Howard, Texas Christian University
Dollie Hudspeth, St. Philip's College
Christina Hult, Utah State University
Maurice Hunt, Baylor University
Jennifer Huth, University of Texas, Austin
Ted Johnston, El Paso Community College
Peggy Jolly, University of Alabama, Birmingham
Bonnie L. Kyburz, Arizona State University
Bill Lamb, Johnson County Community College
Elmer Lange, Northern Kentucky University
Sarah Liggett, Louisiana State University
Billie Luckie, Tidewater Community College
Michael Mackie, Community College of Denver
Barry Maid, University of Arkansas
David Mair, University of Oklahoma
Marcia Mani, St. Louis Community College at Meramac

Carolyn R. Miller, North Carolina State University
 Rick McDonald, University of South Florida
 Sharon James McGee, Kansas State University, Salina
 Lynn Meeks, Utah State University
 Elizabeth Metzger, University of South Florida
 John David Moore, Eastern Illinois University
 Gary Olson, University of South Florida
 Anne-Marie Paulin, Owens Community College
 Jean Pickering, Fresno State University
 Linda Polley, Indiana University/Purdue University
 Nancy Prosenjak, Metropolitan State College
 Kathryn Raigh, University of North Texas
 Alison Regan, University of Hawaii, Manoa
 Duane Roen, Arizona State University
 John Ruszkiewicz, University of Texas, Austin
 Lucy Schultz, University of Cincinnati
 Charles Schuster, University of Wisconsin, Milwaukee
 Bob Schwegler, University of Rhode Island
 Sally Shigley, Weber State University
 John Schilb, University of Maryland
 James Simmons, University of North Dakota, Lake Region
 Phil Sipiora, University of South Florida
 David Smit, Kansas State University
 Lee Smith, University of Houston
 Rachelle Smith, Emporia State University
 Joyce Stauffer, Indiana University/Purdue University
 Bruce Stevenson, Mira Costa College
 Margaret Syverson, University of Texas, Austin
 Pauline Uchmanowicz, State University of New York, New Paltz
 Victor Villanueva, Washington State University
 Irene Ward, Kansas State University
 Jackie Wheeler, Arizona State University
 Joe Williams, University of Chicago
 Donna Winchell, Clemson University
 Wendy Wright, El Camino Community College

Finally I want to acknowledge the contributions to The Call to Write made by members of my family—Lundy Braun and Clare, Lucia, and Martha Catherine Trimbur. They not only provided emotional support; they were co-workers, contributing samples of their writing, suggesting readings and assignments, and locating listservs, newsgroups, and Web sites. This has been, in many respects, a joint venture, and I am gratified by their presence in this book.

Brief Contents

Detailed Contents vii

Guide to Visual Design xxi

Preface xxv

Acknowledgments xxx

PART ONE WRITING AND READING 1

Introduction The Call to Write 2

- 1 THE CALL TO WRITE IN CONTEXT 7
- 2 READING AND WRITING: The Critical Connection 36
- 3 ARGUMENT: Persuasion and Responsibility 73

PART TWO WRITING PROJECTS 113

Introduction Genres of Writing 114

- 4 LETTERS: Establishing and Maintaining Relationships 117
- 5 MEMOIRS: Recalling Personal Experience 155
- 6 PUBLIC DOCUMENTS: Codifying Beliefs and Practices 195
- 7 PROFILES: Creating a Dominant Impression 232
- 8 REPORTS: Informing and Explaining 274
- 9 COMMENTARY: Identifying Patterns of Meaning 328
- 10 PROPOSALS: Formulating and Solving Problems 367
- 11 REVIEWS: Evaluating Works and Performances 416

PART THREE WRITERS AT WORK 455

Introduction Managing Your Writing Projects 456

- 12 WORKING TOGETHER: Individual Writing Projects 462
- 13 WORKING TOGETHER: Collaborative Writing Projects 480
- 14 THE WRITER'S TOOLS: Word Processing and Electronic Communication 494

PART FOUR GUIDE TO RESEARCH 511

Introduction Doing Research 512

- 15 RESEARCH PROJECTS: Using Print and Electronic Sources 520
- 16 FIELD RESEARCH 549

PART FIVE PRESENTING YOUR WORK 569

Introduction Communicating with Your Readers 570

- 17 RESEARCH PAPERS: Using MLA, APA, and COS Styles 572
- 18 DOCUMENT DESIGN 620
- 19 ESSAY EXAMS 653
- 20 WRITING PORTFOLIOS 667

Credits 678

Index 685

Detailed Contents

Guide to Visual Design xxi

Preface xxv

Acknowledgments xxx

PART ONE

WRITING AND READING 1

Introduction The Call to Write 2

1 The Call to Write in Context 7

Writing in Everyday Life 8

Writing in the Workplace 11

■ GOING ON-LINE: ANDREW YOUNG'S REPORT ON THE NIKE
CODE OF CONDUCT 13

Writing in the Public Sphere 14

■ ETHICS OF WRITING 17

Writing in School 23

■ ETHICS OF WRITING: THE PROBLEM OF CHEATING 29

Literacy Narratives: Telling Writing Stories 30

Passage from Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass 31

Passage from Linda Brodkey, "Writing on the Bias" 32

Russell Kim, "Petitioning the Powers" (student writing) 33

2 Reading and Writing: The Critical Connection 36

Previewing 37

Organizing Information 38

Underlining 38

Stephen Jay Gould, "Alfred Binet and the Original Purpose of the Binet Scale" 38

Ian Tattersall, "Out of Africa Again . . . and Again?" 39

Note-Taking 41

Summarizing 42

■ ETHICS OF READING: BOREDOM AND PERSISTENCE 43

Responding 43

- Annotation 43
- Exploratory Writing 45

Analyzing 45

- Jonathan Kozol, “Distancing the Homeless” 46
- Topical Outline 48
- Identifying Sections and Describing Their Functions 49
- Distinguishing Facts and Claims 51

Evaluating 52

- Using Background Information 53
- Evaluating the Writer’s Evidence 60
- Identifying the Writer’s Allegiances 62

Evaluating the Writer’s Language 63

- Denotation/Connotation 63
- Figures of Speech 63

■ GOING ON-LINE: EVALUATING WEB SITES 64

- Stereotypes 67

Logical Fallacies 68

3 Argument: Persuasion and Responsibility 73

What Is Argument? Dealing with Reasonable Differences 75

■ ETHICS OF ARGUMENT: THE WRITER’S RESPONSIBILITY 76

- Darcy Peters and Marcus Boldt, Exchange of Letters 76

Entering a Controversy: Analyzing the Issues 78

- Analyzing Issues 79
- Types of Claims 80

Taking a Position: Crafting a Rhetorical Stance 82

Rhetorical Appeals: Influencing Your Readers 83

- Ethos, Pathos, Logos 84
- Malcolm X, Excerpt from “The Ballot or the Bullet” 84
- “Another Hit Job on Ethnic Cuisine” 86

Constructing the Appropriate Rhetorical Stance 87

- Two Letters of Application 88
- Crafting an Argument: Persuasive Appeals 89

Making an Argument: Looking at the Parts 89

- Claims, Evidence, and Enabling Assumptions 90
- Backing 94

■ GOING ON-LINE: FOLLOWING A THREAD 95

- Differing Views 98
- Qualifiers 100
- Putting the Parts Together 100
- “The Price of Corporate Greed at Leslie Fay” 102

Negotiating Differences 103

- Dialogue with Others 105
- James Moffett, Excerpt from Storm in the Mountains 105

Recognizing Ambiguities and Contradictions	107
Anna Quindlen, "Abortion Is Too Complex to Feel All One Way About"	108
Locating Common Ground	110
"How California Can Fight Teen Pregnancy"	111

PART TWO

WRITING PROJECTS 113

Introduction Genres of Writing 114

4 Letters: Establishing and Maintaining Relationships 117

Thinking About the Genre 117

Letters Home 119

Cathleen Cordova, "Dear Mom and Dad" 120

Richard Marks, "Dear Mom" 121

An E-Mail Correspondence 122

Anonymous Letter and Response 122

Letters to the Editor 124

Mark Patinkin, "Commit a Crime, Suffer the Consequences" 125

Kristin Tardiff, Letter to the Editor 126

John N. Taylor, Letter to the Editor 127

■ GOING ON-LINE: ELECTRONIC DISCUSSION GROUPS 130

Open Letter 130

James Baldwin, "My Dungeon Shook: Letter to My Nephew" 131

Designing Documents 135

Letter from Doctors Without Borders 137

Assignments 139

Working Together: Writing and Designing a Letter of Appeal 139

Call to Write: Letters 139

Invention 140

Identifying the Call to Write 140

Understanding Your Reader 142

Planning 143

Establishing the Occasion 143

Arranging Your Material 144

■ ETHICS OF WRITING: USING THE INTERNET 144

Working Draft 145

Paragraph Development: Describing 145

Beginnings and Endings: Using an Echo Effect to Reframe 146

Peer Commentary 147

Revising 147

Connections and Coherence: Direct and Implied Topic Sentences 148

Writers' Workshop 150

Michael Brody, Letter to the Editor 150

Michael Brody's Commentary 152

Writing Inventory 153