PREFACE

This tenth edition of Statistics Sources fully updates, revises, and extends the scope and content of the ninth edition. From the "Selected Bibliography of Key Statistical Sources" through the main body of the work, there has been a complete revision and expansion to incorporate a wider range of current data sources.

48,000 Citations Included

Nearly 48,000 citations are provided in the tenth edition, approximately 20% more than in the ninth edition. Because this edition has been computer composed, permitting a greater number of citations per page, the total numbers of pages has been reduced from the previous edition. The annotated "Selected Bibliography of Key Statistical Sources" has again been updated and restructured in order to provide details for a basic collection of current and key statistical sources.

Numerous Sources Indexed

As in each earlier edition, during the preparation of Statistics Sources, tenth edition, a thorough analysis and indexing was made of hundreds of American information sources, several years of Statistical Abstract of the United States, numerous basic statistical publications from many organizations, and special statistical issues of professional, technical, and trade journals.

The range of key international statistics indexed has again been extended. Included are statistical publications from the United Nations, other international organizations, national statistical offices, academic institutions, commercial publishers, and other sources.

Arrangement and Content

The familiar and convenient arrangement of the basic work continues as a straight alphabetical list of subjects. For each subject, there is indicated the publications in which statistics on that subject are to be found. Most of the sources listed are publications, but a considerable number of organizations, government agencies, trade and professional groups, and international bodies are cited because they are important sources of statistical data, even if they do not ordinarily publish all of the statistics they compile. In such instances, specific inquiries may be addressed to the organization mentioned.

In listings for countries, three types of key statistical sources are cited (as applicable and available) preceding the alphabetical listing of specific subjects for the country. The first citation is to the National Statistical Office, if the country has such an office. This is followed by a reference to the major printed sources for the country, termed the Primary Statistics Source or Sources. Next comes the Primary Financial Statistical Source, the basic printed compilation for the country which provides economic, financial, and monetary data.

As in earlier editions, the street address of the publisher of any work cited has been provided wherever possible.

Editors' Note

Statistics Sources may best be described as a finding guide to statistics. It does not purport to cite sources of in-depth statistics on technical and commercial activities in specific foreign countries. For such purposes, the reader is referred to the Primary Statistics Source, the Primary Financial Statistical Source, or the National Statistical Office mentioned at the head of the geographic listings, as well as to the particular works cited in the selected bibliography which forms the first component of the work.

The painstaking task of accurately inputting the manuscript for this edition has been the contribution of Carla Rose, Linda Stemmy, and Roberta Wasserman.
