PREFACE

I am delighted that this book should have proved sufficiently useful to merit a second edition. It is still no substitute for the standard textbooks on the four subjects covered by the General Papers, nor for the problem and drafting classes provided by the Inns of Court School of Law. What I hope it does help to do is provide a refresher course in the substantive law which a candidate approaching those classes and, at the end of the year, the examination, needs to know.

I am grateful to Sweet and Maxwell's editorial staff who patiently received the manuscript bit by bit as it took shape. I am especially grateful to Carey Johnston who revised the Crime section and prepared invaluable notes on drafting indictments and notices of appeal.

The responsibility for errors and omissions is of course mine, and the law is stated as at September 1983.
