Dear Architect/Designer:

Thank You.

From over four thousand written replies, critiques and inquiries we learned that you are using the BURRIDGE INDEX in design presentations to your clients . That's the most gratifying compliment and affirmation that we could have received. It tells us that we accurately perceived the need of the architect and designer for a cohesive, high-quality, pictorial product reference.

We appreciate your comments, so keep sending them. A designer wrote, " How do I know what I want until I see it". That is our raison d'etre.

Thank you for your overwhelming support,

A handwritten signature in dark ink, reading "Michael D. BurrIDGE". The signature is fluid and cursive, with the last name "BurrIDGE" being more prominent and having a distinct capital 'I'.

International Facility Management Association

The International Facility Management (IFMA) is the largest international professional association dedicated to the advancement of facility management.

IFMA was formed in 1980 as a support organization to meet the changing informational and educational needs of corporate, government and healthcare facility management professionals. Since then the association has experienced tremendous growth. IFMA currently has more than 6,400 members primarily located in the United States, and Canada. The organization also has alliances with the British Association of Facility Managers, the Japan Facility Management Association, Canada's Federal Interdepartmental Facility Managers Association, Japan's New Office Promotion Association and IFMA Australia.

The exciting yet demanding field of facility management combines proven management practices with the most current technical knowledge to provide humane and effective work environments. Even for the most skilled professionals, it can sometimes be a "juggler's act". Facility managers integrate several related and non-related functions. These include long-range planning, financial forecasting and budgeting, interior space planning, architectural engineering and design and telecommunications networking. More and more, facility management is perceived as a strategic function within progressive corporations worldwide.

IFMA's strategic goals are to develop and maintain high standards of professional conduct in facility management; support the field with information, education and research; further the understanding of the facility management function and its role in the corporate environment; cultivate cooperation among professionals; and publicize the value of facility management.

Increasingly, IFMA's most important mandate is to help facility managers anticipate change. The world is rapidly automating and becoming more sophisticated. Facility managers MUST adapt and lead the way to cutting edge trends. Spotting trends is key. As a proactive organization, IFMA regularly monitors a variety of factors—from "real world" scenarios to academic theories—which may impact the present and future state of facility management. IFMA then works to apply what it has learned by developing strategies that will help practicing facility managers accommodate change.

Facility managers and professionals in related industries can refer to the BURRIDGE INDEX as a select product compilation.
