The University

Founded in 1959, York University has rapidly achieved an international reputation for excellence in teaching, research and scholarship in both undergraduate and graduate studies.

More than 30,000 students from around the world study full-time and part-time at York University's two campuses. The 600-acre York Campus in the northwest area of Metropolitan Toronto is the home of York's Faculties of Administrative Studies, Arts, Education, Environmental Studies, Fine Arts, Science, and Graduate Studies, as well as Atkinson College and Osgoode Hall Law School. Glendon College, York's bilingual liberal arts college, is located on its own 85-acre campus in a parkland setting near the centre of the city.

York University offers the contemporary student a vast selection of courses and programmes of study plus all the educational and recreational facilities of a modern multiversity.

York University is distinguished for its excellence in teaching and scholarship, close student-faculty relationships, innovative teaching methods, academic experimentation, and strong dedication to research.

York University has pioneered in many new and still unique directions, always trying to live up to its motto, Tentanda Via . . . "The way must be tried."

FOREWORD FROM THE DEAN

In the period of less than two decades since its inception in 1965, the Faculty of Graduate Studies of York University has developed thirty graduate programmes of remarkable quality and diversity. These programmes, fifteen of which offer doctoral work as well as masters degrees, include a number of programmes of national and international distinction. In addition to strong discipline-based programmes in the social sciences, humanities, fine arts and physical and biological sciences, our offerings include outstanding professional programmes in administrative studies and law and very recent programmes in Education and Social Work. In accordance with York University's commitment to innovation, symbolized in our motto Tentanda Via ("the way must be tried"), the Faculty of Graduate Studies has also led the way in developing a number of unique interdisciplinary programmes in the areas of Environmental Studies, Experimental Space Science and Social and Political Thought. To permit interdisciplinary work at the Masters' level in areas beyond these three, we also offer a small, very high quality Interdisciplinary Studies M.A. A number of theses written by students in this programme (and many of our other programmes) have been published as books — perhaps the ultimate testimonial to excellence.

As graduates of our faculty have assumed positions of leadership in universities, schools, research organizations, government, the legal profession, business, industry and the performing arts, the University's reputation for excellence in graduate studies has spread throughout Canada and beyond. The attractions are many — strong faculty, bright students, innovative programmes, good resources, and the advantages of living and working in one of North America's finest cities. It is, therefore, not surprising that York's Faculty of Graduate Studies has grown to be one of the largest, and the finest, in the country.
