HUMAN FOOD USES

Preface

The entries included in this Supplement represent material that could not be integrated into the original compilation due to constraints of time and finance. Anticipating that a significant corpus of information would go unpublished, extension of an initial grant was sought from, and approved by, the National Library of Medicine, thereby making this volume possible. The Supplement contains many recent publications as well as some classics that were not overlooked in the earlier publication, but were held aside in order to provide adequate annotation. Despite efforts to include important contemporary research reports and theoretical statements, increasing interest in the biological and sociological aspects of human food behavior means that much new work will have appeared by the time this compilation becomes available. Thus, it seems possible that, within perhaps five years' time, a further supplement may be useful, if interest in the subject is maintained.

In addition to ongoing investigation, however, there remains to be accounted for much published (as well as unpublished) material in the literatures of Eastern Europe; East, South, and Southeast Asia; and the Islamic nations. The present volume and its predecessor have coordinated some 13,000 citations, the majority in English, although major works and some less well-known material are represented for most of the world's widely-spoken languages. It would not seem extravagant to suppose that this figure could be doubled easily for the areas noted, with the support of interested scholars.

In compliance with various suggestions, the index to this Supplement has been structured with cross-referencing, in the hope that access will be facilitated; and rectification of omissions in the list of serial title abbreviations has been given attention.

Unfortunately, a fuller exposition of the history and trends in the study of human food uses cannot be addressed in the space allotted for prefatory comments to a bibliography. More detailed treatment of these subjects awaits a future publication.

Acknowledgments

I am deeply grateful to the National Library of Medicine for approval of an extension of the original grant awarded me, which has permitted completion of this project.

To Mr. Randall Worthington, Program Officer, Extra Mural Programs, National Library of Medicine for his patience and kindness;

To Dr. Martin M. Cummings, M.D., Director of the National Library of Medicine, and Mr. Albert M. Berkowitz, Chief of the Library's Reference Services Division, for their courtesy in allowing me access to the Library's collections; to Mr. Wallace C. Olsen, Chief, Library Operations Division, National Agricultural Library; and to Ms. Robyn Frank, Chief of the Library's Food and Nutrition Information and Materials Center;

To Professor Sol Tax; and Doctor Derrick Jelliffe, M.D.; Robert Seymoure, R.D., M.P.H.; and Ms. Barbara Sutherland, R.D.;

To Professor Royal Tinsley; Ms. Mary McWhorter; and Munuswamy Thiravengaram Ramachandran, for assistance, respectively, with translations from German, Japanese, and Tamil;

To the staff of the Natural Resources (formerly Agriculture) Library, University of California, Berkeley;

To Professor Freda Naroll, from whom the phrase "food uses" is borrowed;

To those colleagues who have taken the time to review the first volume of this bibliography and to provide constructive criticisms and suggestions;

To Mr. Charles Buford and Ms. Marenn Rhone, of Executive Suite Office Services, Walnut Creek, California, for word processing the original manuscript;

And finally to my friends Lucille and Robert de Loach; Jeremiah Vincent Sullivan; and Jane Margaret Palmer—for their supportiveness over the decade and a half that this project has spanned.
