At recently as Thursday, Smith had decided to return to Minnesota, even though the Timberwolves would have only been able to pay him $501,000, the minimum for a player with his experience. But the players' association filed an appeal to overturn Smith's decision to leave. Smith of his first rights, and the league appealed to have the right to disapprove any new contract between Smith and Minnesota.

"At that point it became clear," the NBA says, "that Smith had good things in both cities, but Detroit President Joe Dumaine report, 88

On the Detroit Pistons and the Minnesota Timberwolves. In the case of the Detroit Pistons, the team that Smith joined in 1997, he would be $9 million under the salary cap next summer. Detroit could be $10 million under, Pejan says. Smith had good things in both cities, but Detroit President Joe Dumaine report, 88
