Passage 1

Originally, family names in China came from a sacred poem that has 438 different words. This means that there could be only 438 different family names for millions of Chinese people. Each Chinese family also had a poem of its own with twenty or thirty characters in it, and from these words came a person's middle name. Everyone also had a given name called a milk name. In most cases, the family name was written first, then the second name, then the milk name. So a famous Chinese leader called Sun Yat Sen was Mr. Sun.

Common people in England often got their names from the work they did: Baker, Powdermaker, Cooper (someone who makes barrels). People also took names from the places where they lived or from some feature of the landscape nearby—such as, Westfield, Shore, Hill.

For thousands of years, people who followed the Jewish faith had no regular family names. A boy named Isaac might be called Isaac Ben Jacob, but that only meant he was the son of Jacob. Then, about 150 years ago, the Christian governments of countries in eastern Europe made laws requiring Jews to choose family names. But in many places, Jews were not allowed to take any names that Christians were already using, and so they had to make up new ones. Often, they put together words that suggested things of beauty: flower mountain (Blumberg), rose valley (Rosenthal), gold stone (Goldstein).

In Austria, government officials began to charge a fee for suggesting a name. The more attractive it was, the higher the fee.

In Spanish-speaking countries, a woman keeps her own name after she married. Her son may choose either her name or his father's, or he may combine them, putting the letter y between the two. Y in Spanish means and. So Juan Riveray Gonzalez means: John, the son of Mr. Rivera and his wife who was born into a family named Gonzalez.

Passage 2

Ben sees a little Italian restaurant down a couple of steps, and we stop to look at the menu in the window. The special for the day is lasagna, and Ben says, "Boy, that's for me!"

We go inside, while I finger the dollar in my pocket and do some fast mental arithmetic. Lasagna is a dollar, so that's out, but I see spaghetti and meatballs is seventy-five cents, so that will still leave me bus fare home.

A waiter rushes up, wearing a white napkin(餐巾) over his arm like a banner, and takes our order. He returns in a moment with a shiny clean white linen tablecloth and a basket of fresh Italian bread and rolls. On a third trip he brings enough chilled butter for a family and asks if we want coffee with lunch or later. Later, we say.

"Man, this is living!" says Ben as he moves in on the bread.

"He treats us just like people."

Pretty soon the waiter is back with our lasagna and spaghetti, and he swirls around the table as if he were dancing. "Anything else now? Mind the hot plates, very hot! Have a good lunch now. I bring the coffee later."

He swirls away, the napkin over his arm making a little breeze, and circles another table. It's a small room, and there are only four tables eating, but he seems to enjoy acting like he was serving royalty at the Waldorf. When we've just finished eating, he comes back with a pot of steaming coffee and a pitcher of real cream.

I'm dolloping the cream in, and it floats, when a thought hits me: We got to leave a tip for this waiter.

I whisper to Ben, "Hey, how much money you got?"

He reaches in his pocket and fishes out a buck(元), a dime(一角银币), and a quarter(两角五分钱). We study them. Figure coffees for a dime each, and the total check ought to be $1.95. We've got $2.35 between us. We can still squeak through with bus fare if we only leave the waiter a dime, which is pretty cheap.

At that moment he comes back and refills our coffee cups and asks what we will have for dessert.

"Uh, nothing, nothing at all," I say.

"Couldn't eat another thing," says Ben.

So the waiter brings the check and along with it a plate of homemade cookies. He says, "My wife make. On the house."

We both thank him, and I look at Ben and he looks at me. I put down my dollar and he puts down a dollar and a quarter.

"Thank you, gentlemen, thank you. Come again," says the waiter.

We walk into the street, and Ben spins the lone remaining dime in the sun. I say, "Heads or tails?"

"Huh? Heads."

It comes up heads, so Ben keeps his own dime. He says, "We could have hung onto enough for one bus fare, but that's no use."

"No use at all. Specially if it was yours. "

We walk, threading(穿过) across Manhattan and downtown. I guess it's thirty or forty blocks, but after a good lunch it doesn't seem too far.

1. What is especially recommended on the menu that day?
A. Spaghetti.                      B. Lasagna.
C. Meatballs.                      D. Fresh bread.
2. The author suddenly has the idea to give the waiter a tip because _____.
A. he is very busy with them after they arrive
B. he swirls around their table all the time
C. he gives them very good service
D. he brings more than they order
3. How much do they pay for lasagna and spaghetti?
A. $1.95.                      B. $2.35.
C. $1.75.                      D. $2.15.
4. Ben has got _____ in his pocket that day.
A. $1.35                      B. $1.75
C. $1.00                      D. $2.35
5. After paying the lunch and tip, they have only got a dime, _____.
A. so they still have the bus fare for both
B. so both of them don't have the bus fare
C. so they have to walk home that day because they haven't got enough for both
D. so Ben takes the bus home while the author walks back home

Passage 3

Somewhere out in the ocean, a blue whale is swimming. It is the mightiest animal that ever lived.

It is as large as three railroad cars. It weighs as much as fifty elephants. If its heart were put on a scale, it would weigh 908kg (about a ton). The main artery(动脉) to its heart is so large that a child could crawl through it.

Its mouth is so big that it can hold a small table and chairs. Yet this giant of the deep hasn't any teeth. Its throat is so small that nothing bigger than an orange can get through it. It can swallow only the smallest of ocean animals.

It is lucky that there is plankton in the water. This is the rich, thick "soup" of the sea. It floats near the surface of the water and drifts with the currents. It is made up of the tiniest plants and animals there are. They are so small that thousands of them can float in a water glass. But thousands aren't enough to keep the blue whale alive. It needs billions.

The blue whale doesn't mind being toothless. It gets along very well with the 250 to 300 long, hairlike blades, called whale-bones, that hang down from the roof of its mouth. These blades are longer than a person is tall. They are hard, like fingernails, and have hairy bristles(短而硬的毛) on them. These separate the food from the water that goes into the whale's mouth.

As the blue whale swims about, its mouth is open. Other animals would strangle(窒息而死) when the water rushes into their mouths, but not the giant of the sea. Its nose is on top of its head. It closes when the whale is under the water. It must come to the top of the water to breathe. The air goes in and out through two blowholes(鼻孔).
