Offer

1. Definition of an offer

“A proposal for concluding a contract addressed to one or more specific persons constitutes an offer if it is sufficiently definite and indicates the intention of the offeror to be bound in case of acceptance.” (CISG Art. 14—1) From the above definition, a proposal, in order to be an offer, must satisfy the following three conditions:

- 1) It must indicate “the intention of the offeror to be bound in case of acceptance”.

This requirement is crucial for us to distinguish offer from non-offer. The concept “to be bound in case of acceptance” means that once the trade terms raised by the offeror are accepted by the offeree, the sales contract is formed, and the offeror has no other choice but to perform the contract even without his consent or confirmation.

The Convention gives no express provisions on how to judge whether the offeror has the “intention” to be bound by the offer. In practice, we have to take a close look at the wording used by the offeror in order to make a correct judgment, to examine whether the offer satisfies the two requirements which will be further explained in the following paragraphs, and whether it contains such qualifying conditions as “subject to our confirmation”, which generally is not regarded as an offer, but an “invitation for offer”.

Besides, the judgment may be made according to the actions throughout the process of negotiation, or according to some established trade practices between the parties.

2) It must be addressed to one or more "specific persons".

According to the Convention, the proposal for concluding a contract must be addressed to specific companies or persons. It should not be a price list, or commercial advertisement distributed to the public. Proposals of this kind are also regarded as invitation for offer.

3) The contract must be "sufficiently definite".

This means the terms in the offer must be clear and understood in only one way. The terms must not be vague and ambiguous like "about $1 000 per ton", "reference price $100 per barrel" "shipment is estimated in January". The Convention provides that an offer must contain the following three terms: name of commodity, price, and quantity, and it further provides that the fixed price or quantity does not necessarily definite. For example, an offer may just set out a method to decide the price not fixing it into a certain figure, which reflects the fact that prices are changing rapidly on the world market, and that parties involved in international sales only set out method to decide the price in order to avoid the risk of fluctuations.

2. Validity time of offer

An offer becomes effective when it reaches the offeree (CISG Art. 15). On this point, the laws in all states share the same view, for an offer is an indication of seller's proposal, and the offeree can only decide whether to accept it or not when he receives it. Therefore, if one party expects or somehow learns that someone is sending him an offer before he really receives it, he sends an "acceptance" to the offeror. In this case, no contract is formed even if the content of the "acceptance" coincides with the offer he receives later. The "acceptance" is in fact an offer, and therefore, no contract can be formed on this unless the other party confirms the "acceptance".

3. Withdrawal of offer

The withdrawal of offer means that the offeror, for some reason, withdraws his offer before it reaches the offeree or before it becomes effective. This may happen when the offeree finds that the offer he makes contains some mistake, or that the situation has changed which makes his offer unfavorable to him. The common practice is to make use of a faster means of communication to send the message of withdrawal so that it can reach the offeree earlier than the offer does.

4. Revocation of offer

To revoke an offer means that when the offer has reached the offeree, and it has become effective, the offeror acts to revoke the offer thus to kill its effectiveness. The issue of whether an effective offer may be revoked arouses hot debates among scholars from different law systems. The civil law system provides that an offer is irrevocable within the validity time, or during the time in expectation of a reply, while the common law system provides that an offer may be revoked at any time unless it is accepted. The Convention makes some mediation between the two legal systems of the world which agrees in principle that an offer is revocable before the note of acceptance is dispatched but provides that on the following two occasions, an offer is irrevocable.

- 1) It indicates, whether by starting a fixed time or otherwise, that it is irrevocable.
- 2) If it was reasonable for the offeree to rely on the offer as being irrevocable and the offeree has acted in reliance on the offer.

5. Termination of offer

An offer, even if it is irrevocable, is terminated when a rejection reaches the offeror (CISG Art.17).

It is widely accepted that an offer loses its validity at the time of the rejection by the offeree. The provision in the Convention has two aspects: first, even if it is irrevocable, the principle still applies to the offer, however, the practice in some other countries is entirely different, when the offer is rejected, the offeree can still accept the offer as long as the validity time has not expired; secondly, termination takes place when the note of rejection reaches the offeror, therefore the offeree still has a chance to cancel the note of rejection.

Notes to the Text

1. CISG 是《联合国国际货物销售合同公约》的简写,全称为: United Nations Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods。该公约于 1980 年 4 月 11 日在维也纳订立,共有 101 条,旨在平等互利的基础上遵守同一公约,促进世界各国间的贸易发展。

2. ... to be bound in case of acceptance. in case of 意为“如果发生、在……时、在……情况下”。to be bound 是不定式的被动语态,与前面的 he offeror 有动宾关系。

3. ... without his consent or confirmation. 在没有经他同意及确认的情况下。his consent 有逻辑上的主谓关系, confirmation 的逻辑主语仍是 his。

4. subject to 意为“根据、依据、视……而定、以……为条件、须经……、服从……指挥、受……控制、常遭受、易遭受……的侵袭”。在此句表示“须经……而定”。

5. ...some established trade practices. 过去分词 established 意为“已建立起来的”,做定语,修饰 trade practices。

6. provide 意为“规定”,如:

The contract provides that he cannot work for another company.

合同规定他不得为第二家公司工作。

The agreement provides that the two sides shall meet once a month.

协议规定双方每月会晤一次。

7. not necessarily 意为“未必、不一定”,如:

A transferable L/C may not necessarily be transferred, nor may it be divisible.

可转让信用证不一定非转让不可,也不一定可分割。

It is not necessarily so.

未必一定如此。

8. Therefore, if one party expects or somehow learns that someone is sending him an offer before he really receives it. 在这一句中,or somehow 意为“或者通过其他方式”。

9. ...that the situation has changed which makes his offer unfavorable to him. 在这一句中,为了避免头重脚轻,定语从句被放在了句尾,正常的顺序应将 which 从句直接放在 situation 之后。

10. in principle 意为“原则上”。

11. in reliance on 意为“信任、信赖……而……”。

12. apply to 意为“与……有关、适用于……”。
