People from many countries find it difficult to understand how the majority of Americans live comfortable lives without the support of a public welfare system. Medical care in the United States is expensive; university education can cost $20,000 per year; living well after a worker retires requires more money than will be paid through the Social Security system. Most Americans prepare for these needs by saving a part of their salaries in savings banks; others invest in industries or service corporations in hopes of receiving greater profits.

Most Americans also buy insurance. Private companies sell insurance of many kinds. In buying insurance, a working person agrees to pay a set sum of money every month or at other regular intervals. In exchange, he or she receives money when needed. Life insurance guarantees a sum of money to survivors of the person in case of death. Medical and hospital insurance guarantees payment of large medical and hospital bills. There is also dental insurance and insurance that pays money when a home burns down. An American can also insure a car, furniture or other personal belongings.

Other benefits for working Americans are provided by the companies they work for or the labor unions to which they belong.

All large businesses and many smaller ones offer their workers benefits. These benefits can include free or low-cost medical insurance and life insurance. Many companies also have retirement plans. The companies put money aside to pay their workers when they retire. There are also profit-sharing plans through which extra money is put aside for workers when the company makes a great deal of money in any one year.

Many labor unions also have special funds from which worker can receive monthly checks when they retire or if they become disabled and cannot work. Unions also pay for medicine that the workers need but which may not be purchased by medical insurance. Some pay workers a small amount of money if they lose their jobs.

The cost of higher education is usually paid by a combination of private savings, income from a part-time job held by the student, and low interest loans or grants of money given to needy students by the federal government but administered by the university.

1. How do most of the Americans pay for their huge expenses of living?

A. By working for long hours.	B. By saving a part of their salaries.
C. By setting up their own industries.	D. By working for services.
2. The author mentions all of the following kinds of insurance except _____.

A. children insurance	B. dental insurance
C. fire insurance	D. life insurance
3. An insurance system is that you pay a certain sum of money at regular intervals and you get paid _____.

A. also at regular intervals	B. before you pass away
C. in case of the right need	D. when the hospital bills are large
4. When a worker becomes old or disabled in the US, he may get a small sum of money from _____.

A. his company	B. the government
C. a welfare agency	D. his labor union
5. The expenses of higher education is paid by _____.

A. personal savings	B. low-interest loans

New Zealand is an English-speaking country. But the government recognizes another language, too. This is the Maori language. English sailors began to visit New Zealand after 1770. They found the Maoris, a dark-skinned people, living there. They had come from the islands in the Pacific Ocean 400 years before the 14th century.

For a long time the British Government was not very interested in these far-away islands. It was made a British colony in 1840. In this year the first British people came to settle in the new country. More and more settlers came from British later.

The Maoris were friendly to the first settlers. But soon the new settlers wanted the Maoris' land. So in 1844 there was a fighting between them. This was the first of several wars between the two peoples. The next fifty years was very bad for the Maoris. Many were killed in the wars. Many more died from new diseases brought by the British. In 1840 there were perhaps 200, 000 Maoris. By 1896 this number had fallen to 42, 000.

For many years, the British New Zealanders looked down upon the Maoris. In this century the two peoples have lived in peace. They have equal rights and the Maori language is one of the languages of the country. Today there are about a quarter of a million Maoris, that is, about 9% of the population. Most of them live in North Island. They have a rich culture and a great love of singing and dancing.

1. How long did it take the British Government to make New Zealand its colony after the English sailors first visited New Zealand?
A. About 400 years
B. Less than 70 years
C. More than 74 years
D. About 126 years
2. Which of the following is more responsible for the sharp decrease of Maoris' population?
A. Many pieces of land taken away by the British settlers.
B. The wars between the British settlers and the Maoris.
C. Many deaths caused by some new diseases.
D. A large number of Maoris killed by the British settlers.
3. What does the last paragraph suggest about the Maoris?

- A. They are no longer looked down upon by British New Zealanders.
- B. For centuries, they have lived with the British New Zealanders peacefully.
- C. They live in different areas of the country.
- D. Their language is one of the official language of the country.

4. According to the text, in which of the following periods of time does Maoris' population reach its biggest number?

- | | |
|--------------------------------|-------------------------|
| A. The 20th century | B. The mid 19th century |
| C. The end of the 19th century | D. The 18th century |

Mr. Thompson did not learn to drive a car until he was almost thirty, because he was a very nervous person who always had the convenience of someone else to drive him—first his mother and then his wife. But at last he decided to take lessons, and managed to pass his driving test on the second try, although he wasn't very good at parking yet.

A week later he drove into town by himself and was trying to park between two other cars when he damaged one of them slightly.

When he wrote to the insurance company(保险公司) about the accident they sent him a form to fill in, and one of the questions on the form was, "How could the driver of the other car have prevented the accident from happening?"

Mr. Thompson thought for a minute and then wrote, "He could have parked his car on another street."

1. Mr. Thompson learnt to drive _____.
A. with the help of his wife B. in his thirties
C. in his late twenties D. when he was thirty
2. Mr. Thompson didn't pass his driving test _____.
A. until he had learnt 2 lessons B. since he was not good at parking

D. He could do nothing to prevent it.
5. Who do you think should answer for the accident?

- A. The insurance company.
- B. The driver of the other car.
- C. Mr. Thompson.
- D. Mr. Thompson and the insurance company.

(B)

A strange thing happened to Henry yesterday. He was on a bus and wanted to get off. So he stood up and rang the bell. To make sure the driver heard him, he rang it twice.

But the bus didn't stop, and the conductor came and shouted at him. The conductor was so angry, and spoke so fast that Henry didn't understand a word. The bus stopped at the next stop and Henry got off. As he got off, he heard someone say, "I think he is a foreigner. For he doesn't know the customs here". When Henry got home, he told his landlady(房东) about the story. "How many times did you ring the bell?" she asked. "Twice," said Henry. "Well, that's the signal for the driver to go on," his landlady explained. "Only the conductor is allowed to ring the bell twice. That's why he got so angry."

Henry nodded. "I see," he said.

1. Henry stood up and rang the bell twice because _____.
A. something happened to him B. he wanted to get off the bus
C. the bus didn't stop D. he got on a wrong bus

By midnight, a group of students, led by their school master, had reached a height of 1,500 feet which was about 1,000 feet away from the top of the mountain. But at this point they had to stop climbing because one of the boys became seriously ill. The only thing the master could do was to return to the mountain hut(小屋) where they had spent the evening. From there, he telephoned the police. The police immediately decided to send a helicopter with a doctor on board, for it was the quickest way to make the doctor reach the boy. The helicopter soon arrived but the sides of the mountain were so steep(陡峭的) that the helicopter could not land. A helicopter usually lands on four wheels, but it can land on two. The man who flew the helicopter, therefore, kept it in the air with only one wheel touching the mountainside while the master carried the boy on board.

As a girl, Louise Bethune showed great promise in planning houses and all kinds of structures(建筑). As an adult(成年人), she made her mind to become America's first woman architect(建筑师).

Young architects then usually learned their skills by working in the drafting(活动的) rooms of professional architects.

Most architects didn't want to hire women. But Louise persuaded a well-known architect to give her a chance.

She worked from six in the morning to six in the evening. She wasn't paid much. But she learned as she worked, and her boss allowed her to use his large library.

In 1881, after five years of work and study, Louise set up her own office, she advertised(做广告) "the first professional woman architect in the country was ready for business." Louise insisted that she would not be limited to designing private homes just because she was a woman. She researched all kinds of jobs and designed little churches, storage building, factories and schools. She did very well, inspiring other women to become architects. She often spoke out for fair treatment for women and equal pay for equal work.

Much attention has been given in the media to the so-called information superhighway which is supposed to use computer and telecommunications technology to completely change the way. Americans will be doing business and receiving information and entertainment at home in the future. There have been countless newspaper and magazine articles about it, television and radio discussions, meetings and conferences. However, according to a public opinion poll (民意测验), most Americans would say they never heard of it.

The people who conducted the poll didn't actually talk to most Americans, of course, but they did talk to 1,255 people, and they say the result has a margin of error of plus or minus three percentage points. But even if it's off by three percentage points, it's still surprising. Two-thirds of Americans don't remember having heard of the information superhighway. And even among the 34 percent who have heard of it, most say that they have little understanding of what it is. But even though most of those who've heard of it don't know what it is, six out of ten of them say that they're for it.

It seems very unusual that people can admit that they don't know what something is and yet say they're for it, or against it, for that matter. It generally works out better when you find out what something is first and then decide whether you like it or not, rather than this business of liking something before finding out what it is. This is the way they judge everything these days. They are entitled to have an opinion about everything whether they know anything about it or not.

Unfortunately, the way political leadership works today, the so-called leaders read the polls to find out what the people want and here's a poll telling us that the people are ready to say what they want without knowing the first thing about it. This is the blind leading the blind. No wonder things are the way they are.

1. The text mentions all of the following media to cover information superhighway except _____.
 - A. television discussions
 - B. meetings and conferences
 - C. newspaper cartoons
 - D. newspaper articles
2. According to the text, which of the following is TRUE?
 - A. Most Americans don't really know what information superhighway is.
 - B. Two-thirds of Americans know a little about the information superhighway.
 - C. Most Americans have heard of information superhighway, but don't know what it is.
 - D. More than half of the Americans agree to the idea of information superhighway.
3. What is the contradiction (矛盾) about the Americans the article is trying to point out?
 - A. They are ignorant about information superhighway though they only vaguely (模糊地) know what it is.
 - B. They say they agree with the leaders before they know who they are.
 - C. They don't know much about telecommunications technology though they say they do.
 - D. They express an opinion on something before they know about it.
4. Which paragraph of the text shows the author's comment on people's judgment?
 - A. First
 - B. Second

Mysteries of the Sea

The sea is the largest unknown part of our world. It covers seventy-one per cent of the earth. There is still much to be discovered about this vast(巨大的) blanket of water.

If the waters of the ocean could be moved away, the sea floor with its wide valleys, irregular mountains and rivers in the sea would be an unbelievable sight. Around the edges of the continents the ocean floor is flat and the water does not become much deeper for about thirty miles. Where there are high young mountains along the coast, this flat part may be much less than thirty miles. But where rivers flow into the sea, the flat area may extend for hundreds of miles.

The region(地方, 区域) near the continents, where the water is not so deep, is the place where the ocean's greatest riches(财富) in marine(海生的) life are found. Below these living creatures and plants are the largest known quantities of minerals.

At the end of the flat part the sea floor suddenly drops down, forming deep hollows which are shaped like bowls. These huge hollows hold most of the world's water.

Imagine, if you can, a mountain chain stretching 40,000 miles around the earth. It is hard to believe that this great underwater chain of mountains encircling the earth was discovered only a few years ago.

1. Land areas cover _____ of the earth.

- A. seventy-one per cent B. one third
C. thirty-nine percent D. twenty-nine per cent

2. Around the edges of the continents the water is relatively_____.

- A. narrow B. deep C. shallow D. regular

In October 1949 the United Nations brought a number of officials on foot to Geneva to discuss the problem of eating habits and food supplies of peoples throughout the world. One problem that interested them particularly was a form of illness, about which little was known, among the children in Africa and Latin America.

Two doctors were chosen to make the study. They flew to Africa, south of the Sahara and during the next two months visited ten countries. They found that serious illness of poor eating existed in all parts of Africa.

The sick children are usually from one to four years old. As the illness progresses, the children's stomachs become filled with liquid. The hair changes colour and starts to fall out. The patient loses all interest in surroundings and even in food, and becomes so weak that he wants to lie down all the time.

The doctors pointed out that many Africa children caught this kind of illness because they ate too little milk or meat. It was necessary that the children of Africa should be helped to eat better. The doctors suggested that the production of foods rich in protein be increased. The United Nations should send large quantities of powdered milk to hospitals and child-health centres.
