Great Love 至高无上的爱

There never was a woman like her. She was gentle as a dove and brave as a floness. The memory of my mother and her teachings were, after all, the only capital I had to start life with, and on that capital I have made my way.

There is no job more important than parenting. I can find the answer from my mother.

My belief began when I was just a kid. Idreamed of becoming a

My mother was a domestic. Through her work, she observed that successful people spent a lot more time reading than they did watching televisions. But anonused that my brother and I could only watch two to three pre-selected TV programs during the week. With our free time, we had to read two books each from the Detroit Public Library and safemit to her written book reports. She would must them up with check.

The and highlights. Years later we realized her marks were a ruse. My mother wastilizers. She had only received a thirt-glare education.

Although we had no money, between the covers of those books, I could go anywhere, do anything and be anybody.

When I entered high school, I was an A student, but not for long. I wanted the fancy clothes. I wanted to hang out with the gays. I went from being an A-student to a B-student to a C-student, but I didn't care. I was gotting the high fives and the low fives and the pats on the back. I was cool.

One night my mother came home from working her multiple jobs and leomplaned about not having enough fatalian hair shirts. She said, "Okay, I'll give you all the money I make this week serubbing floors and cleaning buthrooms, and you can buy the family food and pay the bills. With the family food and pay the bills. With

I was very pleased with that arrangement but once Igot through allocating money, there was nothing left. I realized my mother was a financial germie to be able to keep no for over one beads and any kind of food on the table, much less buy clothes. I also realized that immediate gratification wasn't going to get me anywhere. Success required intellectual proparation.

I went back to my studies and became an A-student again, and exeminally I fulfilled my dream and I became a doctor.

My story is really my mother's story—a woman with little formed education or worldly goods who used her position as a parent to change the lives of many people around the globe. There is no job more important than parenting. This I believe.

不论是什么让你觉得很特别很放松,去做就好。

生活得一边过一边瞧! 活在当下,享受当下,车站很快就会到达!

I Live Four Lives at a Time 我的四种生活

Don't believe that winning is really everything. It's more important to stand for something. If you don't stand for something, what do you win?

—Lane Kirkland

I live a life of four dimensions—a wife, a mother, a worker, an individual in society. Diversified roles, yes; but they are well knit by two major forces: an attempt to discover, understand, and accept other human beings; and a belief in my responsibility toward others. The first began in my childhood when my father and I acted out Shakespeare.

He refused to let me merely parrot Hamlet's brooding soliloquy, Lady Macbeth's sleepwalking scene, or Cardinal Woolsey's selfanalysis. He made a fascinating game of helping me understand the motivations behind the poetic words.

In college, a professor further sparked this passionate curiosity about the essence of others and, by his example, transmuted it into a deep concern, a sense of responsibility that sprang not from stern Calvinistic principles, but from an awareness of all I received—and must repay with gladness.

I believe this acceptance, this tenderness one has for others, is impossible without an acceptance of self. Just when or where I learned that the full quota of human weakness and strength was the common property of each of us, I don't know. But somewhere in my late twenties, I grew able to admit my own drives—and, rid of the anguished necessity of recostuming them, I was free to face them, and recognize that they were neither unique nor uncontrollable.

The rich and happy life I lead every day brings new witness to the validity of my own philosophy, for me. Certainly it works in marriage. Any real marriage is a constant understanding and acceptance, coupled with mutual responsibility for one another's happiness. Each day I go out strengthened by the knowledge that I am loved and love.

In the mother-child relationship, those same two forces apply. Words are useless to describe my efforts to know my own children. But my great debt to them for their understanding of me is one I have often failed to repay. How can I overvalue a youngster with the thoughtfulness, the imagination to always phone when a late arrival might cause worry? To always know how to reassure. How can I repay the one who dashed into adulthood far too young but has carried all of its burden with a firm, joyous spirit?

My job itself is a reaffirmation of that by which I live. Very early in my working life, I was a small cog in a big firm. Emerging from a tiny job, I found a strange frightening world. Superficially, everyone was friendly. But beneath the surface were raging suspicion, distrust; the hand ever ready to ward off—or deliver—the knife in the back. For years I thought I was in a world of monstrous people. Then I began to know the company's president. I have no way of knowing what he had been. But at seventy, he was so suspicious, distrusting, that no one was
