斯蒂文森和他的《诱拐》

斯蒂文森(1850—1894)是 19 世纪英国著名作家,《诱拐》是他的主要作品之一,自 1886 年出版后,一直广为传诵。

斯蒂文森出生在英国一个著名的工程师的家庭里。起初他在爱丁堡大学攻读土木工程,后来改学法律,1875年成为律师。他从大学时期开始即从事写作,他写过剧本、诗歌、小说,他最脍炙人口的作品有《金银岛》(1883)以及一系列以苏格兰为背景的小说,如《黑箭》(1888)、《巴伦特雷的少爷》(1889)、《卡特林娜》(1893)以及《赫米斯顿的丰尔》(1896)等。他的作品给英国文学宝库留下了一笔珍贵的遗产。

《诱拐》一书以18世纪苏格兰詹姆斯党人斗争历史为背景,以一个孤儿遭到 叔 父陷害、流落在苏格兰高地为线索,描绘了当时苏格兰人民的生活和斗争。作者对于苦难的人民寄予深切的同情。他对于高地的风土人情、秀丽的景色刻划得维妙维肖、栩栩如生。

《诱拐》对地主阶级丑恶本质的刻划可谓入木三分。一个地主为争夺财产,费尽心机陷害嫡亲侄儿,企图把他拐骗到美洲种植园去当奴隶;他对佃户的残酷剥削,遭到众人诅咒和憎恨;他的贪婪、阴险和愚蠢,与高地穷苦人民的

高尚品质形成了鲜明的对照。

Chapter 1 | Leave Home

The story of my adventures begins in 1751.¹⁰

It was a fine morning early in June. I left my father's house for ever, and went down the road.

Good Mr Campbell² was waiting by his garden gate. He was the minister of the village church.³

"Well, David," he said, "I will go a little way with you."

We walked on. For some minutes we were silent and then the minister spoke.

"Are you sad because you are leaving Essendean?" he asked.

"I don't know, sir," I replied. "Essendean is a good place. I have been happy there, but I have not seen the world. My parents are dead now.

I am leaving to make a future for myself." 1

"Well," Mr Campbell said, "I must tell you something. When your mother died, your father was very ill. He gave me a letter. He said it was your inheritance. "When I am dead,' he said, 'give my boy this letter. Send him to the house of Shaws. It is not far from Cramond. I came from that place, and my son ought to go back there."

"The house of Shaws!" I cried. "Did my tather come from the house of Shaws? And what can my inheritance be?"

"I don't know," he answered, "but you bear the name of that family —Balfour of Shaws. It is an ancient, honest Scottish house. Your father was a gentleman. His conversation gave me great pleasure. I often invited him to my home to meet gentlemen of my own family."

He gave me the letter. On it my father had written: "To Ebenezer Balfour." House of Shaws, My son David will deliver this."

My heart was beating hard. Here was a future for me. I was seventeen years old, and the son of a poor Scottish village school teacher.

"Mr Campbell," I said, "do you think that I ought to go?"

"Yes," the minister replied. "Go at once. Cramond is near Edinburgh. You are young and strong. Start off now, and you will reach it tomorrow. If your high relations do not receive you, you can come back to me. But I hope they will welcome you. And now, I must give you some advice."

His face was serious. He sat down under a tree.

"Never forget your prayers," he began. "Read your Bible every day." Next he described a great house with its laird and its many servants.³ "Be-

"I'll try, sir," I said.

"That is a good answer," Mr Campbell said. He put his hand in his coat pocket.

"I have bought your father's books and furniture, "I he said. "Here is the money for them.
And here are three small gifts from Mrs Campbell and myse!f."

He stood up, and prayed for me. For a moment he held me in his arms. Then he said goodbye and hurried away. I could see that he did not like leaving me.

of my own name and blood. I imagined the big place full of servants, and the fine furniture in the rooms. 2

Suddenly I felt ashamed.

I looked at the minister's three gifts. They were a shilling, a Bible, and some country medicine.

I put them in my small bundle and climbed the hill. At the top I stopped and looked back at Essendean. I saw the minister's house and the village church and the trees in the churchyard. Under those trees my father and mother were lying in the earth.

Chapter 2 I Come to the House of Shaws

Early next morning I looked down over a wide plain. In the middle of the plain there was a great city. It was Edinburgh. At the far edge of the plain I saw the sea. There was a flag on the castle, and ships on the water. I was astonished.

I stopped at a cottage, and asked my way. A man told me Cramond was west of the city. I went on and on. I saw some soldiers marching along a main road. I loved their red coats and the gay music of the band.

I reached Cramond, and asked a man the way to the Shaws. He looked at me strangely. I saw that he was surprised by my question.

"He is looking at my country clothes," I thought. "They are dusty from the road. He thinks I am not fit for a great house." ①

When I spoke to other people, they gave me the same strange look. What was the matter? I could not understand.

An honest fellow was coming along a side road with his cart.[®]

"Do you know the house of Shaws?" J asked.

He, too, stopped and looked at me strangely.

"Yes," he said.

"Is it a great house?"

"Well, yes. The house is a big one."

"And the people in it?"

"Are you mad?" he cried. "There are no people there."

"What?" I said, "not Mr Ebenezer?"

"Oh, yes," the man said, "there's the laird, if you want him. What do you want there, young

"I'm hoping for some work," I answered.

"What?" the man cried sharply. "Let me give you some advice. Don't go near the Shaws."

Next I met a neat little man who was wearing a beautiful white wig. I saw from his wig that he was a barber. Barbers know everything and everybody. They talk to people when they are cutting their hair.

"Do you know Mr Balfour of the Shaws?" I asked,

He laughed sharply.

"Ebenezer?" he said. "I know him, but he's not a friend of mine."

Late in the afternoon I met a dark, angry woman. She had a mad look in her eyes. I asked again for the Shaws.

She turned and led me up a hill. She pointed to a great building down in the next valley. I looked.

She turned angrily and went away. Her words filled me with fear. In those days people still believed that curses brought evil. I found that I was trembling.

I sat down on the side of a ditch. I looked at
