Daddy's Lesson

by Kay Barrett

There is a small house on a hill. Inside the house lives a family: John, Anne and Daddy. The family is very poor.

One day, Daddy says, "I have to go on a trip."

Daddy leaves them some money.

"This money is for food."

Daddy leaves. The children are sad and lonely.

The next day, a man comes to the house.

He is wearing a red hat.

He is selling chocolate.

"Hello, children," he says.

"Do you want some chocolate?"

"Chocolate is food! Daddy said the money was for food," says Anne.

The children buy some chocolate.

That night, the children go to bed happily.

Daddy's Lesson

On the second day, a man comes to the house.

He has a long beard.

The man is selling toys.

"Hello, children," he says. "Do you want some toys?"

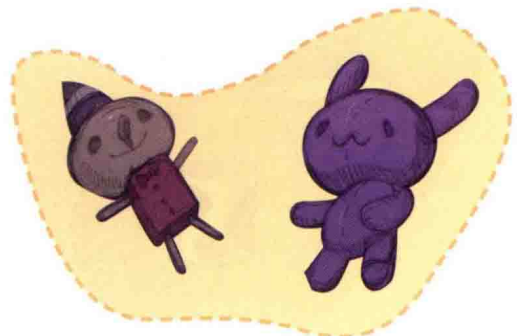

"I want a new toy. Daddy wants us to be happy," says John.

John buys a toy boat and Anne buys a doll.

That night, the children go to bed happily.

But they are hungry in the night.

Daddy's Lesson

On the third day, a man comes to the house.

He is wearing a yellow scarf.

The man is selling vegetables, eggs and milk.

"Hello, children," he says. "Do you want some food?"

"I only have one coin!" says John.

"Only one coin?" says the man. "You can buy a bottle of milk. Nothing else."

John gives the man his coin.

That night, the children are very sad.

They are still hungry!

On the fourth day, Daddy comes home.

"Daddy, we are hungry!" says John.

"Hungry?" says Daddy. "I gave you money for food."

"We used the money to buy chocolate and toys," says John.
