This year, a new course has been added to the choices at our university. The course is called Information Technology. Students from Art Department, Engineering Department and other Departments all take the course. The content of this course may be endless, because there are so many things to be explored and today's society is so depended on computers and new developments technology. Even if your school does not have the same course as I am taking, it would be a worthwhile effort to try to develop a program. Not only would you benefit from the information learned, but the rest of the students at your school would also benefit a lot.

There are four purposes of the course. The first is to learn practical skills in computing, communications and networking, or data storage. The second is to understand the great influence of information technology on social communities. The third is to gain knowledge of how information technology can be used in imaginative ways. The fourth purpose is to learn applications of information technology that do good to people. These four purposes not only show that this program really teaches valuable information to the students, but also demonstrate this course can add something new to any major.

I have a home computer on which I've learned in my own time. I have used it like a home study course. I have sat down with it day after day, night after night. I have forced it to give up some of its secrets. Now I can use it to do some of the work that I get paid for. And I can do this work in my own home, instead of in an office. Many people may soon be working on a computer at home, just as many now take in other people's typing.

Some things about computers are easier than you may fear. First, computers are logical. Things that at first seem difficult will make sense to you after you learn the rules. Second, it is really not hard to learn enough to use today's machines. You do not need to be a great brain. But you do have to learn to think in new ways. And you do have to keep a good bit of information in your head. Finally, there are many people around who are really enthusiastic about computers. These people are always happy to be of help.

远 The writer's purpose to write the passage is to tell the readers _____.

- A) that he has some computer learning methods to share with them
- B) that he is a computer expert who can teach them
- C) he is a scientist who studies computer
- D) that he is skilled in computer programming

苑 According to the passage, all of the following statements about the author are true except that _____.

愿 According to the writer, he even can use a home computer to _____.

- A) get some basic information
- B) do his work that he gets paid for
- C) be a logical computer writer
- D) get the solution to some puzzling secrets

- A) very quickly
- B) as much as the author's co-workers
- C) to think like a computer
- D) about computers through the easier way

园 According to the passage, computers are described to be _____.

- A) difficult

A revolution is under way. The technology of computer science is having a great influence on our lives, and the most immediate result of this technology is its effect on employment. Robots and computer-controlled machines have already joined the work force in highly developed countries. They have taken over most jobs on the car assembly line. One big American company has shown that it is now possible to replace half its 猿园 assembly workers with machines. Robots carry out boring tasks very efficiently for an hourly "wage" of about $ 缘. The average human worker on a car assembly line, in contrast, earns about $ 愿 an hour.

What does the future hold, if the computer is taking jobs away from humans? If large groups in society are dissatisfied and restless, there will be an increase in violent crimes.

A great social change is necessary if we are to survive the automation revolution. It is up to the politicians to deal with the problem. An obvious solution is a shorter working week. Less time at work would mean more time for entertainment, and more opportunities for further education. A greater demand for entertainment would lead to an increase in job opportunities. In theory, even the unemployed should have a reasonable income. After all, thanks to the new technology, it will be economical to pay people not to work.

原 According to the passage robots are used in factories to _____.

- A) do all the work done by workers formerly
- B) join the workers in all types of work
- C) control machines so that the latter work properly
- D) put together the parts of cars

- B) It's cheaper to use robots than employ human workers.
- C) Many robots are doing man's work in developed countries.
- D) Robots enjoy doing boring and hard work.

题 It is implied in the passage that _____.

- A) it is necessary to have a great change in society
- B) computers are replacing human workers
- C) unemployment will make people go against the law
- D) politicians must do something about the revolution

源 When the workers have a lot of free time, they would like to _____.

- A) go into service industries
- B) go to high school
- C) have a lot of amusement
- D) find more interesting jobs

题 According to the passage, unemployed workers ought to be paid, because _____.

- A) it is the new technology that has taken away their jobs
- B) not very much money will be spent
- C) the new technology will not make the government lose money
- D) it is reasonable for them to have an income

Why does the progress of modern world happen so fast? Surely because progress of a particular kind is actually taking place around us and is becoming more and more obvious. Although mankind has undergone no general improvement in intelligence or morality, it has made extraordinary progress in the accumulation (积累) of knowledge. Knowledge began to increase as soon as the thoughts of one individual could be communicated to another by means of speech. With the invention of writing, a great advance was made, for knowledge could then be not only communicated but also stored. Libraries made education possible, and education in its turn added to libraries: the growth of knowledge was made faster by the invention of printing. All these were comparatively slow until, with the coming of science, the speed was suddenly raised. Then knowledge began to be accumulated according to a systematic plan. The stream became a river ; the river has now become the sea. Moreover, as soon as new knowledge is acquired, it is now turned to practical use. What is called “modern civilization ” is not the result of a balanced development of all man ’s nature, but of accumulated knowledge used to practical life. The problem now facing humanity is : What is going to be done with all this knowledge ? As is so often pointed out, knowledge is a two-edged weapon which can be used equally for good or evil (邪恶) . It is now being used for both. For instance, while some people are using science to kill men ’s bodies, surgeons use it to save lives. We have to ask ourselves very seriously what will happen if this double uses of knowledge, with its ever-increasing power, continue.
